Italian Delegates Warn of Another 'World War' As Britain's Envoy Demands League's Resistance

Aids of Long Charge Plot In His Death; Vow to Indict Guilty; Throngs View Body

Secretary of Senator Probes Alleged Plot, Secret Session.

Hints Lots Drawn For Role of Killer

Farmers of Bayou, State Leaders, Join in Line Passing Coffin.

By the United Press.

Baton Rouge, La., Sept. 11.—Huey Long's allies turned away from his coffin tonight, vowing to seek indictments against any person suspected of participating in an alleged plot which ended in the United States Senator's death.

While the high and the humble were streaming past Long's coffin in the rotunda of the State capitol, Earl Christenberry, the Senator's secretary, was pressing an investigation into charges that Long's murder was decided weeks ago at a secret meeting at which lots were drawn to determine who would do the shooting.

Long's friends will not hesitate to fling the accusation of conspiracy to murder against any person, it was said, and they are prepared to go before a grand jury to do it.

Christenberry said sufficient evidence already had been found to point to a conspiracy, but he refused to indicate the nature of it.

"There is no doubt that there was a plot to kill the Senator," he said. "We already know some things about it. You can bet your last dollar that as soon as we get some more evidence there is going to be action around here."

All this was going on back of the heavy bronze door in the capitol, where Long's political allies have their offices. Out in the vast rotunda of the capitol the people of Louisiana were enacting another drama as they filed past the coffin where Long's body, clad in a tuxedo suit, was lying.

Grave Is Dug.

That scene was almost a summation of Huey Long's life—a blend of noise, drama and crowds. The mourners' line curled into the front door and past the coffin. As they departed they had to go past a half-dozen carpenters who had opened their kits and spread their tools on the expensive marble floor of the rotunda. They were building two fences to keep in line the crowds that will move slowly past the coffin until 4 p. m. tomorow, when the funeral will be held.

Outside there was a clang of picks and spades. Grave diggers were hacking away at the turf in the sunken garden outside the capitol.

"It's unlucky to leave a grave open at night," a man in the crowd muttered.

National Guardsmen, unarmed but straight and tall in their brown uniforms, stood guard at the coffin. The wall behind the casket was smothered with flowers, and they, too, were a sort of history of Huey Long's life.

"Eleventh Ward of New Orleans," read a gilt ribbon across a cluster of roses and asters.

"New Orleans Clearing House Association," proclaimed another one.

At dusk 2,000 persons had drifted past the coffin, taking hurried looks at the body and turning to gape at the carpenters. One of them whistled softly as he sawed—a popular song called "When I Grow Too Old to Dream."

No tears were shed at the coffin once it had been moved into the capitol.

Earlier, Mrs. Long, swathed to the chin in dark melancholy blue, went to the funeral parlor and came out dabbing her eyes. Her daughter, Rose, 20, and a younger son, Russell, walked by her side. Rose clinched her handkerchief in her right hand.

But the scene in the rotunda was for persons who did not know Long—those who probably never saw him except in death. Farmers, red-necked from the sun and with the mud of the bayous caked on their boots, stood in line in the rain for a 2-second glimpse at the coffin.

The high French heels of young girls, going clickety-clack across the marble floor, challenged the din raised by the carpenters.

A surprising number of children

St. Louis Battle Of Politicians Leaves 4 Shot

Factional Split Is Blamed for Revolver Fight at City Hall.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Sept. 11.—A political quarrel in the office of John P. English, recorder of deeds, today ended in a revolver fight in which four men were wounded.

Bullets splattered against the walls of English's office and corridors of the city hall, while occupants of the building fled and women employes shrieked.

The wounded, none seriously hurt, are Lawrence J. Fontana, St. Louis, a State representative; City Market Master James O. Stubbs, and two policemen, Jonathan Painter and Arthur Sullivan.

The gun play followed a visit to English's office by Fontana and Stubbs.

An hour after the fight detectives arrested Gregory Moore, chief deputy recorder, who was booked at police headquarters "suspected of assault to kill." Police quoted him as explaining "it was just one of those things."

Witnesses said Stubbs accused English, who is chairman of the dominant Democratic city committee, or his assistant, Moore, of some political injustice done to Fontana.

English countered with the assertion that Fontana had pulled down signs advertising a picnic of English's Twenty-fourth Ward Democratic organization.

Following a scuffle, in which about six shots were fired, Fontana ran from the office, revolver in hand, followed by several other men. Stubbs, seized by police before he got out of the building, explained "Just a little fight. There was nobody hurt. I've got a right to carry a gun."

Later English said the visitors, apparently angered, provoked a quarrel. When asked if he were looking for trouble, Stubbs was quoted by the recorder as replying, "Yes."

Stubbs, then, according to English, pulled a gun and fired two shots.

Ickes, Hopkins Set for Battle On Works Plan

Will Give Opposing Views to Roosevelt Today on Jam in Program.

By Felix Bruner.

Facing the fact that it will be impossible to carry out the $4,000,000,000 works relief project as originally planned, President Roosevelt will confer today with key men in the program. The conference, at Hyde Park, is expected to result in a revision of plans.

The President was faced with these alternatives:

1. Going ahead with the present program, including both "made" work and useful building projects, with the certainty that he can not achieve his objective of putting 3,500,000 persons to work by November 1.

2. Abandonment of much of the program, except work that can be started quickly, with a minimum of material costs, and pushing forward to the original goal of putting 3,500,000 persons to work by November 1.

In the conference today Mr. Roosevelt will receive arguments for both plans. Secretary Ickes left for Hyde Park yesterday armed with facts and figures. He planned to show the President how he can put 1,500,000 persons to work on useful building projects.

Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress administrator, boarded a train for Hyde Park last night, also armed with facts and figures to show that if the Ickes plan is followed it will be many months before the Government can "get out of this business of relief."

Backing Ickes will be Charles West, Undersecretary of the Interior, and close friend of the President. In between, in the role of conciliator and political adviser, will be Frank C. Walker, head of the Division of Applications and In-

Little Routs 2 More Foes In Title Drive

Golf Champion 7 Under Par in Ousting Riegel, Young in Amateur.

Goodman Beats College Champion; Lynch, Ex-G. U. Star, Wins

By Dave Herman.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, Sept. 11.—It looks like Lawson Little again.

The 25-year-old Californian, champion of America and Great Britain, battered down two more opponents today, literally ran rough shod over them and thus entered the fifth round of the National Amateur Golf Tournament, four steps removed from his goal.

While a flock of favorites, including a former champion, fell, in hectic "suicide round" battles, the square-jawed little marched on—conqueror of Knox Young, jr., of Pittsburgh, Pa., 6 and 5, in morning match, and 20-year-old Bobby Riegel, of Richmond, Southern champion, 5 and 3, in his afternoon encounter. Champion Little brought about the defeat of his two young challengers with spectacular golf that was not eclipsed by any of the 16 survivors for the double rounds today. Seven under par for 28 holes was this Little, 4 under in the morning, 3 under in the afternoon. So, it looks like Little again.

"How are you gonna beat him?" "And who's got the stuff to beat him?"

They are the questions spectators and scribes who have observed the keen play of Little asked themselves today, as they looked forward with interest to tomorrow's fifth and sixth-round matches.

Left in the fight are eight golfers with national reputations. The others are fairly well known.

Johnny Goodman, the Omaha insurance salesman, who skyrocketed to fame by first bumping off Bobby Jones at Pebble Beach in 1929, only to win the 1933 National Open, had two gruelling matches. He had a close call in the morning, eliminating Hal Chase, 1 up, and in the fourth round the Nebraskan put out Ed White, of Texas, National Intercollegiate champion, 2 and 1.

Others who joined Little and Goodman, inseparable friends, by the way, in the fifth round were George Voigt, the former Walker Cup star, now playing in old-time form; Joe Lynch, of Boston, former Georgetown University captain; Walter Emery, of Oklahoma, 1933 national intercollegiate champion; Willie Turnesa, of New York; Charlie Kocsis, of Detroit; Jack Munger, of Dallas; Eddie Held, veteran New York star; Freddie Haas, 19-year-old Louisiana flash; Tommy Goodwin, of New York; Harry Givan, of Seattle, Northwest champion; Johnny Nash, of London, Canada; W. B. McCullough, of Philadelphia; Eddie Meister and Oliver Transue, both local hopes.

Little tackles McCullough tomorrow and you don't have to worry about that—the champion will meet either Turnesa or Voigt in the quarter-finals. Goodwin meets Kocsis and Goodman faces Meister.

Other battles bring into action the following: Givan vs. Munger, Emery vs. Held, Transue vs. Lynch and Nash vs. Haas.

The wave of upsets, started yesterday, did not abate one bit today. There were just as many, if not more.

Allison Wins From Perry In an Upset

Texan Defeats Briton at Forest Hills; Finals Today.

Helen Jacobs Triumphs, Winning Her Fourth Consecutive Title.

By the United Press.

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 11.—Fred Perry, for the past two years absolute monarch of a tennis empire which embraced all the far-flung courts of the world, today was dethroned by a red-necked, lantern-jawed fighter from Texas.

With 15,000 hysterical patriots cheering him on, Wilmer Allison, of Austin, blazed by Perry in straight sets, 7—5, 6—3, 6—3, to move into the final round of the Men's National Singles championship. Tomorrow he'll meet his Davis Cup comrade, Sidney B. Wood, of New York, in a battle for the title which has eluded them both for so many years.

Wood gained the right to contest for the championship with a 6—2, 4—6, 12—10, 6—2 victory over Bryan M. Grant, of Atlanta, in the opening of the semi-final of the day.

While the king was falling, a queen—Helen Jacobs, of Berkeley, Calif.—was moving on to greater triumphs. In the closing match of the day Miss Jacobs relentlessly mowed down Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Boston, 6—2, 6—4, to win the Women's National championship.

Fourth Consecutive Title.

The victory, achieved with a minimum of effort, gave the smiling Californian her fourth consecutive American championship. A remarkable feat indeed, but when the great crowd, exhausted by almost six hours of tennis, shuffled out of the stadium it was of Allison, and his victory over the world's No. 1 man, that it talked.

The chief subject of the crowd's conversation was how Perry would have fared if he had not suffered a bad fall in the seventh game of the opening set—a fall which he said after it was all over—injured his right kidney and caused him intense pain whenever he swung his racquet arm.

Perry later minimized the injury. In the clubhouse after his defeat, the Wimbledon champion and ace of England's Davis Cup forces, said he had no "grouse."

"I had a licking coming to me, and it was my hard luck to have it come two days too soon. Allison played magnificently."

Allison in Fine Form.

Not in all his many years of campaigning has the Texan ever reached the heights he did today. It was doubtful that Fred, on the best day he ever saw, could have stemmed the irresistible surge of the Allison of today.

The Texan, from the first serve until the final point, played as a man possessed. It seemed that he was out to redeem himself for all his failures—Davis Cup and otherwise—of the past. No longer a youngster—Allison is nearing 31—he set a blistering pace all the way. He raced about the court to take and make his shots from everywhere, and when he laid his racquet on a ball—be it volley, lob, drive or service—he threw every ounce of his 155 pounds behind it.

And he didn't shoot for the middle. It was all or nothing on every shot, and during most of the three

Bitterness Voiced in Geneva At Sir Samuel's Insistence To Check Il Duce in Africa

Premier Writing Prompt Reply to Historic Talk Before Council.

Laval Thwarted In Plea for Peace

Expected to Side With English Despite Pact With Neighbor.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Geneva, Sept. 11.—Britain today advocated throwing full force of the League of Nations covenant against Italian militarism, and France seemed near a similar decision.

Sir Samuel Hoare, Britain's low-spoken, meticulously dressed foreign Secretary, announced England's stand in a speech directed over the heads of the members of the League Assembly to the Venice Palace in Rome, where Premier Benito Mussolini sits mapping plans for the conquest of Ethiopia.

Britain's demand drew a retort from Italy tonight that "if Sir Samuel Hoare's hint of sanctions is carried out, colonial affray may be transformed into a world war."

A spokesman for the Italian delegation to the League said Premier Mussolini would make prompt reply either through the press or in an address.

Italians Are Bitter.

The Italians were bitter at Hoare's assertion that "Britain stands for steady, collective resistance against all acts of unprovoked aggression."

His proposal that colonial economic advantages be shared with Italy drew the sneering comment of the Italian spokesman:

"Huey Long's successor was found in Geneva today when Sir Samuel Hoare organized the new share-the-wealth movement."

It was understood that Mussolini's reply would be even more vigorous and outspoken against alleged British interference with Italy's "colonial destiny."

The position of France in the crisis gained added importance when Premier Pierre Laval vainly attempted to reach Mussolini by telephone tonight to make a last-minute appeal for a compromise settlement, giving Italy peaceful economic control of most of Ethiopia.

It had been indicated earlier that Laval, if rebuffed, would throw France's lot with Britain to defend the League and seek a decisive test of Italy's ability to flaunt the Covenant of the Nations by attacking a member.

May Side With Britain.

Delegates of most of the 54 great and small powers represented in the Assembly, where Sir Samuel made his historic speech, indicated they would side with Britain to determine once and for all time whether the League shall continue to exist as a spineless society of "talkers" or stake its entire strength and prestige in a "do-or-die" effort to halt Italy.

All eyes were on Laval as the swarthy little butcher's son pondered whether to cast aside his hard-won friendship with Italy for the sake of preserving the League—foundation stone of French post-war foreign policy.

In Rome, Editor Virginio Gayda of Giornale d'Italia, an accepted spokesman for Mussolini, told his readers tonight: "The hour has come for the first important test of the newly established friendship between Italy and France. So far Premier Laval has shown determination to localize the Italo-Ethiopian conflict as a colonial affair. We expect Laval to pursue such a policy to the end in accordance with the just visualization whereon his policy was based."

The decision announced by Hoare and likewise the decision facing Laval, are fraught with terrible consequences. Peace of the world may hang in the balance.

If Italy attacks Ethiopia, a League member, she violates the covenant. The covenant provides that such a breach shall call for invoking by the other members of sanctions or penalties. This punishment may

Hitler Scorns Wilson, Brags Of Nazi Power

Army 'Our Most Valued, Proudest Possession,' He Proclaims.

By the Associated Press.

Nurnberg, Germany, Sept. 11.—Adolf Hitler expressed jubilation that Germany has regained her military freedom and "is no longer a football" in a keynote proclamation read today to the Nazi Party convention.

Scoring the famous 14 points of the late Woodrow Wilson, the Reichsfuehrer demanded:

"Where are the 14 points of Wilson and where is the world today? The Reich is no longer a football and no longer an object of foreign maneuvering, but now is in security—in security not by pacts but by the real power of the nation and by the firm will of its leadership."

(President Wilson's 14 points in 1918 formed a basis for the Treaty of Versailles and for the eventual establishment of the League of Nations.)

Army Proudest Possession.

Hitler, in an official proclamation, asserted: "We Nazis intend to live in peace and quiet with our neighbors. It is not necessary for us to prove our security by any demonstrations. It is sufficient that we ourselves know it.

"We see in our army the protection for peaceful labor. And when we are forced to make sacrifices, then we will make them for our liberty and labor.

"This army is our most valued and proudest possession."

An anti-Semitic note found a prominent place in the first day's deliveration, as did a sharp warning to "men of the cloth" indulging in politics.

Rudolf Hess, minister without portfolio and chairman of the convention, told the Nazis Hitler had saved Germany from bolshevism.

30,000 Applaud Wildly.

He drew wild applause from his 30,000 listeners when he asserted: "For the first time the nation's defense force is attending this convention as a representative of the people."

Hitler this afternoon solemnly

Oct. 10 Hinted As Zero Hour In Italy's War

Diplomatic Sources Think Date Is Set; Army-Navy Ties Tightened.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Sept. 11.—Italy tightened the ties between her land and sea forces in and near East Africa tonight as hints were heard in diplomatic circles that October 10 might be the "zero hour" for hostilities with Ethiopia.

Provisions were announced for close collaboration between the fleet in the Red Sea, the Gulf of Aden and the Indian Ocean, and Gen. Emilio de Bono, who is high commissioner of Eritrea and Somaliland and commander of Il Duce's troops there.

An order published in the Official Gazette stated:

"The commander of the naval division of East Africa, in the case of particular emergencies of a colonial nature or hostilities of whatsoever nature, is to place himself at the disposition of the high commissioner of East Africa for the eventual use of any force recognized as urgent and as not contradictory to the directives imparted by the navy department."

Plan Closest Co-operation.

The commander also was told that in the case of combined operations with the army air force he is to cooperate most closely with Gen. de Bono. Permission was granted for the use of special supplies for refueling at points remote from bases.

Military men described the provisions as a preparatory move to the closest co-operation between the navy and the army when—and if—the Italo-Ethiopian war begins.

As for the latest speculation concerning the "zero hour," diplomatic informants said their word concerning the October 10 date came from government sources. This, however, could not be confirmed.

The press, following upon the strong speech at Geneva by Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign secretary, appealed to France not to follow Great Britain in her attitude toward sanctions.

The Giornale d'Italia, which often take the form of economic pressure—blockades and embargoes—or if necessary military action.

Mussolini has foreseen the eventuality. In his recent interview with Ed L. Keen, United Press executive, he asserted he was ready to go ahead "with the League, without it or against it." With 1,000,000 men under arms by October, Mussolini believes he is ready to wthstand any threat of nternatonal mltary nterventon.

Hoare's speech contained many sidelights on British policy, but he made certain there would be no doubt as to the keynote of John Bull's intention.

To Resist Aggression.

Near the end of his speech, Sir Samuel paused, raised his right hand above his head and thrice smote the tribune to command unwavering attention.

Then, with all eyes fixed upon him, he declared:

"Britain stands for steady collective resistance against all acts of unprovoked aggression."

Again smacking his hand against the speaker's stand, he repeated deliberately.

"Steady, collective resistance against all acts of unprovoked aggression."

Delegates and galleries received the words with sober attention. Baron Pompeo Aloisi, of Italy, toyed with his monocle, poker-faced.

It was understood the phrase which Hoare emphasized was agreed upon textually with Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin in London.

Peaceful Means Urged.

Sir Samuel reaffirmed Britain's recognition of Italy's need for expansion of territories and new colonial sources of raw materials, but insisted that these ends could be attained peacefully.

He concluded with a clear hint that if the League fails to fulfill its duty, Britain may withdraw into diplomatic isolation from th European continent.

"I can not believe," he said, "that Britain's attitude toward the covenant will change so long as the League remains an effective body and the main bridge between the United Kingdom and the continent remains intact.

"It is easy to exaggerate the decisive character of the advantage which a supply of raw materials appears to give the countries possessing them, for there are countries which, having little or no natural abundance, have yet made themselves prosperous and powerful by industry and trade.

Exploitation Is Hinted.

"It is clear that in the view of many, this is a real problem and we should be foolish to ignore it. Maybe this is exaggerated, it may be also that it is exploited for other purposes.

"Nevertheless, the question is causing discontent and anxiety. The wise course is to investigate it, see what proposals there are for dealing with it, see what is the real scope of the trouble and if the trouble is substantial, try to remove it."

Sir Samuel indicated Britain is ready to grant Italy substantial economic concessions in Ethiopia but that she opposes Italian territorial expansion.

"In the view of his majesty's government," the foreign minister continued, "this problem is economic rather than political or territorial. It is fear of monopoly—of withholding essential colonial raw materials—that is causing alarm.

Fidelity to League.

The foreign secretary emphasized Britain's "unwavering fidelity to the League and all that it stands for."

"The case before us is no exception, but on the contrary a continuance of that rule. The recent response of public opinion shows how completely the (British) nation supports the government in full acceptance of its obligations to the League membership, which often is proclaimed the keynote of its foreign policy."

The League, Sir Samuel said, "in conformity with its precise and explicit obligations, stands, and my country stands with it, for collective maintainance of the Covenant in its entirety."

There was an implied warning to France in Sir Samuel's assertion that "in the present crisis the nations must fulfill their League obligations as well as safeguard their own security." France, since the situation became acute, has been wrenched between desire to maintain the League—on which her foreign policy is based—and at the same time avoid offense to Italy, whom she has won only recently to the "Stresa front" against Germany.

The British statesman finished, amid a blaze of camera flash-lights, with an urgent appeal to Italy to stand by the League.

"There are too many empty chairs at our table now," Sir Samuel said.

He made it clear that John Bull has no intention of becoming the world's policeman, asserting that "if the burden of the Covenant is to be borne, it must be borne collectively."

Lack of Chiseling Muffles Drums For New NRA; Liberty League Aids Little Lawyers.

By Raymond Clapper

PROSPECTS of a new NRA next winter are growing more and more remote.

The reason is that the anticipated ammunition which was to have put the drive behind a new NRA has not been provided by the benighted business man. In other words, the flagrnat breaking down of code hours and wages which was scheduled to follow the Schechter decision throwing out NRA did not appear in the proportions that had been expected. The business man turned out to be more civilized than the Administration had expected.

There has been some breaking down, but it did not reach the anticipated epidemic proportions. After the Schechter decision, Mr. Roosevelt asked NRA to check up on wages and hours and report departures from NRA standards.

NRA listed 9,049 violations of code standards in working conditins during July and 5,779 in June, following the Supreme Court decision. In June, 857 instances of price-cutting were reported and 2,490 in July. This, however, failed to startle anyone. Throughout the existence of NRA there had been thousands of violations. Files of the NRA compliance division were gorged with complaints long before the Supreme Court said nobody had to obey the codes.

NRA field studies since the Schechter decision indicate that there are two definite waves moving along in the wake of NRA's collapse. In the first wave, hours are stretched. Along behind that is moving a wave of wage reductions and layoffs. These two waves originated among the small chiselers, the same concerns which caused Gen. Johnson so much woe in the earlier NRA days and which, later, Donald R. Richberg had to wrestle with. Gradually these two waves have moved on from the chiselers into the field of small competitors who were forced, in self-preservation, to meet their competition.

This progressive breaking down of standards has not noticeably appeared yet in the larger, more solidly founded industries. These larger industries, officials say, have shown a far-sighted interest in attempting to preserve the gains in working standards introduced under NRA. Their sense of responsibility in this situation has averted a public reaction which would have demanded revival of some form of control. One factor favoring concerns which desired to preserve the labor gains made during NRA has been the business pick-up which has eased the pressure to cut into pay rolls.

Data now are being assembled covering wages and hours for the current period. Some had expected that after Congress adjourned, and public attention was diverted, there might be a more widespread breaking down of standards. NRA officials have been unable to detect marked change in this direction from the incomplete data now at hand.

Unless there should be some decided change in the next few months, it will be difficult to present a case strong enough to persuade Congress that a new NRA should be set up. Feeling in Congress is inclined against revival of such an experiment. Even after President Roosevelt requested the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee to make a study of the situation with a view of presenting legislation next winter, the respective chairmen displayed no interest.

If the more representative business concerns continue their present course, the fact that numbers of little concerns, mostly beyond reach of Federal legislation anyway, are chiseling, probably will have little effect on Congress.

Democratic National Chairman Farley is counting on the Guffey coal law to carry Pennsylvania for Mr. Roosevelt this time. This is the bill which the President asked Congress to pass regardless of constitutional doubts, "however reasonable." If the Supreme Court throws the act out, Mr. Farley will still count on it carrying Pennsylvania.

The report is around that the staff of ace lawyers—including John W. Davis and George W. Wickersham — retained by the American Liberty League to study New Deal legislation has completed its opinion holding the Guffey coal act unconstitutional. This "unofficial Supreme Court" is preparing its opinions in legal form, with complete citations, to be sold in pamphlets for a few cents each. That will save private lawyers a good deal of work. They can take the Liberty League brief, strike out the names of half a dozen $50,000 lawyers, sign with a better case than they could their own names, and go to court prepare for themselves.

Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth comparing Huey Long and Cousin Franklin in the Ladies Home Journal this month: "If Senator Long has the charm of the cartoon kids, let us say, it seems to me that Mr. Roosevelt's is perhaps more like that of the boy hero of a book I recollect reading when I was a child, who was always sunny and sweet and unperturbed. A sort of precursor of the latter-day character of Pollyanna."

Apparently the impression has got around that the Administration has an exchange professorship arrangement with the Soviets. The Democratic national committee has a letter from a man who wants the job of prime minister in Siberia.

When Postmaster General Farley was in Hollywood recently he had a visit with Shirley Temple.

"Is she a Democrat?" Farley was asked.

She acts like one," he replied.

Probably always asking for more candy.

reflects the government position, suggested in a two-column front-page editorial that although France Might gain Britain's sympathies by supporting England now, Britain's attitude may change if the conservative government falls.

It asked Laval: "What faith can France have in Britain's conception of European politics if England draws her infantile theme of spite and retaliation to the point where she has threatened to exclude herself from Europe?"

The Gioornale D'Italia reminded Premier Laval of France the present friendship between Italy and France is due in part to his efforts.

Japan Held as Example.

Continuing its argument, the newspaper asked how France could vote for sanctions when sanctions were not imposed in other cases, such as Japan's invasion of Manchuria.

The newspaper demanded that the League, instead of talking about sanctions, devote its effort to localizing the Italo-Ethiopian conflict, for "in regard to the East African situation one can not honestly avoid speaking of conflict.

"This conflict, initiated by Ethiopia in an uninterrupted series of aggressions and violations, now follows its inevitable and logical course.

"All those governments and men who with good faith want to work for peace can now propose only this theme—localize the conflict, restore it to the colonial nature which it should have and avoid every way it might precipitate an absurd European tragedy.

"This has been up to this time the line maintained by Laval. We expect it will be followed to the end, according to the just view which inspired it."

An official communique denied a report that Italy has suggested to Germany the formation of a non-aggression pact.

Snell Foresees Attack in '36 On Constitution

Claims New Deal Bills Aim to Dramatize Issue for Next Campaign.

By the Associated Press.

A Republican charge that President Roosevelt had "dictatorially demanded" unconstitutional legislation in order to dramatize a 1936 campaign demand for a change in the Constitution, came yesterday from Representative Snell, of New York.

Snell, House minority leader and one of twenty-odd persons who have been mentioned for the Republican presidential nomination, made the statement just as it was disclosed that despite the busy days of Republicans, the Democratic national committee planned to pursue a waiting policy for the next three months.

Chairman James A. Farley went on record with the remark that there would be little activity so far as the committee was concerned until about time to begin rounding up delegates in January for the national convention.

Fletcher Plans Meeting.

At Republican headquarters, Chairman Henry P. Fletcher was busy with plans for a meeting of the national executive committee two weeks hence. He was arranging to put before the committee an outline of his program for the next few months. Already he had set about expanding the women's division.

Outside of committee circles, there was more activity forecast for the Democrats, however. President Roosevelt was described at Hyde Park as likely to make at least one speech on his forthcoming Western trip, giving his views of the accomplishments of the last session of Congress.

Talk of the plan came in the midst of a disagreement over whether Senator Huey P. Long would have been a strong threat to the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt. Senator Nye (Republican), North Dakota, thought he might have held the balance of power. Senators Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, and Donahey (Democrat), Ohio, did not believe he would have changed the result in 1936.

Funds Are Sought.

Chief among the duties to be performed by the two national committees in coming months is raising funds to finance the campaign. In this respect, the Republicans were disclosed yesterday to be some $425,000 better off than the Democrats. They had $25,000 in the bank. The Democratic financial statement yesterday showed they had $14,890 in the bank, $1,170 in pledges and $417,868 in debts.

The statement was filed here as word came of a talk President Roosevelt had on Tuesday with Father Charles E. Coughlin, the Detroit priest, at Hyde Park. Almost simultaneously a denial was made public there that January had been decided upon as a time for the resignation of Farley as Postmaster General.

Friends have said that Farley intended to begin some time this fall or early winter to devote his whole time to the campaign. His denial of a specific date was not expected to alter that intention. The statement telephoned to Hyde Park by Farley was that it was up to the President to decide when he should quit. At Hyde Park, it was emphasized further that a resignation time had not been discussed in the recent conferences between Mr. Roosevelt and his Postmaster General.

Snell Fears "Big Stick."

There was no outward hint of the nature of the Detroit priest's visit. In recent months he has been a strong critic of the New Deal.

The Snell statement, published in yesterday's final Congressional Record, said that measures enacted by Congress would be "dumped" upon the Supreme Court which would hold them unconstitutional.

Snell added that this would give the President the club "with which to belabor both the Supreme Court and the United States Constitution."

"There can be little doubt that such tactics may be politically shrewd," he said.

"That President Roosevelt and his advisers intend to make an attack on the Constitution a part of their campaign next year is perfectly obvious. It does not rest on speculation. Their record clearly indicates it.

"The Republican Party is prepared to meet that challenge. We will welcome a straight-out fight to the finish on that issue.

"The short cut to Utopia which the demagogic leader always promises, and demands haste in reaching that destination, leads nowhere but to the destruction of orderly government and the loss of liberty by the individual."

Women to Take Field.

A flying squadron of ten prominent Republican women, to create "an enthusiastic party spirit," is planned by Mrs. Robert Lincoln Hoyal, director of the women's division of the Republican national committee.

Mrs. Hoyal's plans include the appointment of well known women of the party organization who will go into the field to deliver addresses and arouse party enthusiasm.

She said she planned to ask the executive committee of the national committee, which meets September 25, to pay the traveling expenses of the flying squadron. Party headquarters, it was learned, had received assurance from New York that a united drive of local, State and national workers had resulted in the collection of $40,000 which will be placed in the national party fund.

Plane Is Built at Hagerstown For Expedition to New Guinea

'Baby Amphibian' Will Aid in Search for New Plants and Animals.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 11.—Richard Archbold, research associate in mammology of the Museum of Natural History, New York City, is in Hagerstown awaiting delivery of a specially built plane capable of landing on small lakes, which will be used early in 1936 by an expedition into sections of New Guinea where new species of animals and plants are known to exist. It is the western section of New Guinea, some places of which have never before been explored, that the Archbold party will explore.

The specially built "baby amphibian" which the expedition will use is similar to planes being built here by the Fairchild Aircraft Corporation for Pan-American Airways Service in Alaska.

When the expedition is working in sections inaccessible by plane, the amphibian will be used in dropping supplies. A specially built cargo chute is being installed for this purpose.

The single-motored plane will carry ten, including pilot and co-pilot. Russell Rogers is the regular pilot of the expedition and is here to make tests before the plane is flown to North Beach, Long Island, for further tests.

A small island off the west coast of New Guinea will be the base of the expedition. The plane will be placed aboard steamer at San Francisco for Sidney, Australia, whence it will be flown to its base.

The plane will be equipped with an aerial camera, and many sections of New Guinea will be photographed from the air. Only preserved and mounted animals will be brought back. The expedition head expects to find about 100 new plants.

Associated with Archbold in the expedition party will be G. H. H. Ttate, associate curator at the Museum of Natural History, while A. L. Rand will be in charge of the advance party.

State Probing Plot Charges In Long's Death

Officials Silent on Data; Thousands View Body of Senator.

was in this line. One girl of 6 led her mother up to the coffin, but the woman turned away. The little girl looked.

Generally, Long's enemies stayed away. Some of them were in the crowd outside the capitol when the body was brought from the funeral parlor. They took off their straw hats, limp and drooping from the rain, as the coffin was carried up the sweeping flight of steps.

One of the first persons past the coffin was Mrs. Josephine Fohn, of New Orleans, an elderly woman in a shapeless brown dress. At the neck of her dress sparkled a pin—a gilt ornament in the shape of a fish. On the fish's head was a crown.

"See," she said, while waiting for the line that stretched to the coffin to shorten, "see, a kingfish."

Rap, rap, rap, went the carpenter's hammers and still Mrs. Fohn talked.

"I don't know whether he was right all the time," she said, "but I guess he was fo rpoor folks. I'm poor folks. He said 'Every man's a king.' And I guess he meant it. Maybe he was wrong sometime, but when I read where he had died, I said to my two boys 'you've got to take me up to Baton Rouge in your car so I can go to the funeral.' They couldn't get away. I came on the bus."

The line was getting shorter now and Mrs. Fohn was abreast of the coffin. There was steam on the lenses of her horn-rimmed glasses and she brushed at them angrily. Mrs. Fohn took a quick look at the coffin and doddered out into the rain. The crowd swallowed her. Inside a carpenter whistled and pounded a nail through a two-by-four.

Gloom was both outside and inside the Capitol. Long lieutenants, still groping for a formula to retain control of the State, whispered in the corners. They told stories in a vague, uncertain way of how the plot to assassinate Long had been taking shape for more than a month. No follower of Long was prepared to say who was associated with Weiss in this movement, but they whisperde of a meeting at which lots were drawn to determine who should fire the shot.

Tell of "Mistake."

One story that seemed to have some substance is that whoever was plotting against Long's life almost got the wrong man. A Long's weight and height, was drivstocky, bushy-haired man, about ing along the road in a car, it was said, when another automobile ran him to the side of the road. Two men, waving pistols, told the man who resembled Long to get out of the car. While his face still was a blur in the dark, they are reported to have said to him:

"You're the guy we're looking for."

Once he stepped out of the glare of the headlights, and the armed men got a look at his face, they changed their minds, it was related.

"Sorry, brother," they were reported to have said, "it's our mistake. We're looking for the big shot."

This incident was reported to Long and was one of the reasons he got up in the United States Senate and read a stenographic report on what he said was a conference of his enemies, planning assassination.

All except one of Long's safety deposit boxes have been opened, according to Christenberry. No will was found, he added. It is known that Long's life was insured for $50,000.

"That insurance policy is the largest item we know of in his estate now," Christenberry said. "Of course, he owns a home in New Orleans and has other small assets."

Accord in Family.

Death seems to have brought reconciliation to the Long family. There were times when Earl and Julius Long were at odds with their brother. Once when Earl was testifying in the endless litigation in which Huey was involved, the Senator raced down the aisle of the courtroom, shouting: "Listen to that Earl Long lie.'

Now the family is united here and will attend the funeral, headed by 82-yearlold Huey P. Long, sr.

Anti-Long forces were quiet today, disregarding the rumors and stories of an assassination plot. However, they checked their records to see whether there was evidence that Weiss had been active in opposition to the Senator's dictatorship. They found only that Weiss had voted consistently against the Long faction.

Lee O. Lester, vice president of the Square Dealers, an anti-Long organization, said he would not commit the group to any definite policy until the board had met and taken action.

Ickes, Hopkins Set for Battle On Works Plan

Will Give Opposing Xiews to Roosevelt Today on Jam in Program.

formation. In addition, Undersecretary Tugwell, in charge of Rural Rehabilitation, will be present.

The President will be under the necessity of choosing between the Ickes program and the Hopkins program. No possibility of reconciliation of the differences is seen. The two key men of the works program are as far apart as the poles on what should be done.

Complaints Pour In.

Facing not only the failure of the plan, President Roosevelt is confronted also with the fact that the works program, hailed originally as a great political aid to the Administration, is rapidly developing into a political boomerang. There is evidence that hundreds of communities seeing their useful projects thrown out in favor of boondoogling schemes are making their feelings known. Hyde Park is being deluged with letters of complaint.

From Cincinnati, the Associated Press reported that William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, had announced that he plans to appeal to President Roosevelt to overrule the PWA project rejections made by Hopkins.

"We are alarmed over the policy of Hopkins in rejecting so many PWA projects," Green said. "We are appealing to the President to intervene. I am sending a telegram to the President tonight."

Green was in Cincinnati to address a convention of the American Federation of Government Employes.

Projects Turned Down.

In most instances of PWA projects, communities have arranged to pay 55 per cent of the cost. They have done this because they believe the projects are necessary and they are willing to assume more than half the cost. In about 2,000 instances Hopkins has turned down these projects.

In each instance in which a projects has been turned down by Hopkins, Ickes has quickly informed the community concerned of just what has happened. Since September 4, when the number of projects turned down by Hopkins reached 2,000, he has failed to act on PWA proposals. He has about 5,000, on which he has taken no action. Whether his failure to act was designed to prevent more complaints from localities or was for some other reason has not been explained.

A typical complaint came yesterday from Palermo, N. Dak. Several months ago the only school building in the town burned down. The community arranged to raise 55 per cent of the cost of a new building and asked the PWA for the remaining 45 per cent. Some 50 per cent of the community are on relief and in need of work. The PWA approved the allotment for the school building and passed it on to the Hopkins organization, where it was turned down. Almost simultaneously, the community was informed that the Works Progress Administration planned to give it a golf course and a bird sanctuary, to be financed completely by the Government.

Arkansas Complains.

Another complaint came from Arkansas. Applications were made for 45 per cent grants for water works and sewer systems in nine towns. The PWA approved the applications and sent them on to Hopkins. His organization turned down the waterworks projects but approved the sewers. Residents of the town, who have no water supply except back yard pumps, are wondering what they are going to do with sewers when they have no water.

One of the principal reasons why PWA projects are being rejected by Hopkins is that the cost per man per year is too high. It was revealed yesterday that the PWA and WPA are using two different formulas in arriving at cost per man. The PWA, basing its calculation on experience, figures that workmen will be employed on the average of 1,175 hours a year. The Hopkins organization figures an average work year at 1,500 hours. The difference makes the Hopkins estimates about 25 per cent higher than the Ickes estimates.

Ickes is insisting that Hopkins has no right to reject his projects, but merely the right to make recommendations as to cost per man and availability of labor. He holds that regardless of action by Hopkins, the projects can be sent to the allotment board. However, none of the rejected projects has reached the board.

Delay Is Admitted.

Ickes revealed yesterday that the PWA has received applications for 10,699 projects to cost $2,648,075,504. Of this amount, $1,501,339,684 would be contributed by local communities and $1,144,735,840 would represent Government grants. The PWA estimates that the Government's share would be $880 per man per year, making it possible to employ 1,500,000 men for a year. But they frankly admit these men can not be put to work by November 1.

Meanwhile, all sections of the works program were struggling to get their applications for allotments in shape to meet the deadline today, after which, according to the President's orders, no applications will be received.

The Rural Resettlement Administration revealed that it had asked for a total of $527,000,000, with which 265,000 persons could be put to work for a year. The construction program, including suburban housing, would cost $295,000,000 and the rehabilitation program, designed to rehabilitate 330,000 farm families, would total $210,000,000. In addition, $22,000,000 would be used to purchase and retire submarginal lands. It was estimated that it will cost $640 to rehabilitate each farm family.

Tugwell to Cut Down.

At the same time, it was revealed that Rexford Tugwell plans to put drastic orders into effect to carry out President Roosevelt's instructions to cut the personnel in emergency agencies. On August 15, the Rural Rehabilitation Administration had 18,500 employes, of whom 14,180 were field workers formerly employed by the FERA. Tugwell ordered that by September 15 the number should be cut to 6,000 and that by November 1 it should be down to 5,000.

An indication that part of the Public Works housing program will be saved came later yesterday with the announcement that President Roosevelt had approved 16 additional slum clearance and low-rent housing projects to cost $24,750,000. The projects are in 13 cities in 10 States.

The PWA also announced that the Government now owns or has under option 72 sites for low-rent housing. Of these, the announcement said, the Government has acquired title to 22 sites and has either started construction on them or is prepared to start building operations in the near future. Six projects now are under construction.

The President has ordered that contracts for all works projects must be let by December 15.

"If this order is applied to housing projects, it will be necessary to revise our method of procedure," the announcement said.

Figures at the office of the Division of Applications and Information showed that of the original $4,880,000,000 appropriation, a total of $3,339,579,689 had been either allotted to specific projects or "earmarked" in lump sums for particular types of work. Of this amount, $715,000,000 goes for direct relief.

Applications from all sources total well over $8,000,000,000.

laid the corner stone for a new party convention hall which will be the largest structure of its kind in the world. Nazis said for at least 1,000 years to come Nurnberg will have a meeting hall which is as monumental in its way as the Coliseum of ancient Rome.

When the building is completed eight or ten years hence it will seat 60,000 persons—a massive witness to Nazi power.

"Stand fast, speak as an eternal witness," Hitler said as he performed the act of coner-stone laying. In a brief speech he observed:

"We are laying the corner stone today of the first great architectural monument of the third Reich. Even if our movement should ever come to nought, generations to come for hundreds of years will admire this reverent work."

Warns Political Clerics.

The new building will be of stone, backed up by thick brick walls. In keeping with Hitler's ideas on mass effect, the stage alone will have room for several thousand persons.

Hitler's proclamation had this warning on the church situation:

"We have already fought clerical politics and run it out of the Reichstag after a long fight in which we had no government assistance, but the other side had the advantage But today we have this power of making our battle for these principles lighter * * * we will never carry on this battle against Christianity as such or against the confessions * * * but we will keep our policy clean of priests who missed their profession and who should have been politicians instead of clergymen."

Hitler asserted his "fanatical belief" in the future of Nazism. He warned price boosters the Nazis would "fight such elements" and said the party has "an unshakable will to prevent inflation."

The leader admitted a temporary food shortage was created in some sections by the poor 1934 harvest, but said "we have successfully passed over this crisis."

Frederick Guard Unit Awaits Beer Sale Ruling

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Sept. 11.—Officers of National Guard units stationed here are awaiting a ruling of Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor on whether beer may be sold without a license in a State armory. The point raised in Montgomery County was thought settled here more than a year ago when the then county license commissioner, Ira J. McCurdy, ordered that the sale of beer cease in the Frederick Armory. Beer had been sold in the local armory without license some months before complaint was made to Commissioner McCurdy. He ruled that no more beer should be sold without license. The ruling has been complied with since.

The sale of beer had been profitable to the units, which sponsor the two canteens here. Profits are used to provide extra rations at summer encampments.

Things as They Are

American System Seen Endangered If Latest New Deal Laws Are Upheld.

By Samuel Crowther.

THE PRESIDENT'S letter to Mr. Howard shows all too clearly that the President is without comprehension of the significance of the laws that he jammed through Congress. Otherwise he would not be able to speak of them as forming a cohesive whole or to assure business that the menus for a balanced diet were ready and that eating might begin.

The promise that no further legislation of what is called reform character will be asked at the next session of Congress is not important. The legislation which has already been passed makes such fundamental changes in the American system that, if it be declared constitutional by the Supreme Court or be made constitutional by amendment, further sweeping laws will be necessary until every vestige of the American system is removed.

It may be that the letter is purely a political document and its promises are to be taken in the Rooseveltian sense. It is not a tribute to the intelligence of the American people to tell them that for a while they need fear nothing from their rulers. That, to say the least, is an odd conception of the function of the Executive. It is true that the stock market responded, but that means nothing at all. The professionals are hoping to incubate a bull market. The more consequential business men, up to the moment of writing, have said nothing at all. They have not even said "important if true" and for a conclusive reason. They do not share the President's gay confidence that the group of acts rushed into the statute books will, by the sheer worthiness of the intentions of the institutions said to be behind them, make for a broader and better life.

* * * *

ONE needs only a short memory to recall the wide gap which up to date has always existed between what the President said a law would do and what the law did. The President has announced each major act as epoch-making. He explained that his money maneuvers would of themselves do everything needful in the way of balancing and restoring prices and earnings and pave the way for a sound prosperity. As everyone knows, they have done nothing of the kind. He announced that the National Recovery Act and its NRA would save the Nation. The business records plainly show that the NRA only intensified the depression. The beginnings of whatever business confidence now exists start with the Supreme Court decision invalidating the NRA. It is noteworthy that the automobile business, which refused to be hampered by the NRA, is the most properous industry in the country. The PWA and various other spending agencies were to end unemployment. But unemployment has steadily increased. On the same day that the President gave out his letter, Gen. Johnson is reported as saying in a speech:

"There are no less than 10,000,000 people with no employment at all. They, with their dependents, are at least one-third of the population of the United States. Much of agriculture is still prostrate. Many of the rest of us are on a part-time low income basis."

* * * *

THE President, to date, has not been right about the effect of any major act which he has caused to be passed. That is the record as it stands. No cruel Bourbons frustrated the promised beneficial effects of money tinkering. Neither did they kill the NRA. For it must always be remembered that the Supreme Court only buried the NRA. Both of these major experiments failed because they ran directly counter to recorded economic experience. Under other names and other circumstances both experiments had frequently been tried before. They were really not experiments.

Likewise the essentials of the legislation that has been put on the books by the New Deal is not experimental in the sense that it is new. It is only new to us. And none of it has ever worked anywhere in the form in which we have adopted it. None of it can be made to work within the boundaries of the American system. For the essence of all the legislation is the substituting of group action for individual action—the individual is submerged for the benefit, it is contended, of the mass.

* * * *

AT many points the laws contradict one another. For instance, the Guffey coal bill will raise the price of coal. This will make necessary either higher railroad rates or railroad subsidies. Increasing the cost of transportation will widen the gap between producer and consumer. This will force labor under the Wagner bill to demand higher wages. This will increase the price of industrial products, and the AAA will be called on for higher prices to maintain a parity. If a dog chasing its tail is the symbol of the more abundant life, then we shall have the more abundant life.

These laws can be made to work only by a further regimenting of the country so as to reduce it to a flat, drab socialism.

If we take the President's letter as it stands, it is ominous that he does not know this.

Katharine Cornell's "Romeo and Juliet" Booked for National Week of October 14

Creatore, Band Veteran, Billed By the Rialto

"China Seas" Scheduled for Fourth Week; Battle for Schumann-Heink.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Gerald G. Gross,
Substituting for Nelson B. Bell.

Most interesting news along the local amusements front is that Katharine Cornell will play Juliet at the National the week of October 14 and that, beginning next Monday, Creatore, the famous band leader of a generation ago, will conduct four concerts daily at the Rialto Theater.

Both items, as intriguing as they are different from each other, are strictly on the level. The news sources are, respectively, Director Tom Moore, of the newly reopened Rialto, and Ray Henderson, Miss Cornell's press mouthpiece, with offices in New York.

Reporting the addition of Florence Reed to the cast of "Romeo and Juliet," which is being prepared for another epochal road tour by the very road-minded Miss Cornell, we said last Monday that the production might be expected here late in October or early in November. Mr. Henderson abolishes such speculation with his statement that October 14 will be opening night, the stay is for one week and matinee performances will be given on Wednesday and Saturday.

Liners Bringing Newcomers.

Muarice Evans, London actor who will make his American debut as Romeo in this revival of Shakespeare's best known love tragedy, sails from England today on the Berengaria. Ralph Richardson, another Englishman who is a stranger to our stage, will follow Mr. Evans on the Aquitania next Wednesday. He will essay the role of Mercutio.

Miss Reed, as the nurse; Charles Dalton, as Capulet, and Alice John, as Lady Montague, are among other members of the third cast which Miss Cornell has assembled for "Romeo and Juliet." Holdovers from last winter's New York engagement include Charles Waldron (Friar Laurence), Irby Marshal (Lady Capulet), David Vivian (Peter), and Robert Champlain (Gregory).

Then, of course, there is Lady Cornell herself. She sails for the United States from Genoa on Friday, ending a long visit in Vevey, Switzerland, with Mr. and Mrs. Rudolf Besier. Mr. Besier, it will be remembered, is the author of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," which a few seasons back provided the actress with one of the greatest successes in a career that includes "The Green Hat," "The Letter," "Alien Corn" and many more starring vehicles.

Mr. Henderson reminds us that she hasn't appeared here since "The Barretts" filled every seat in the Belasco for each of eight performances during the week of March 6, 1932.

Guthrie McClintic will stage "Romeo and Juliet," the settings and costumes for which were designed by Joe Mielziner.

Returning to the road which was so cordial to her last year, Miss Cornell expects to play "Romeo and Juliet" in Washington, Boston, Baltimore, Hartford and New Haven, Conn.; Philadelphia, Chicago, Omaha, Des Moines, Indianapolis and six or more other cities.

Ninth Street Surprise.

And Creatore!

Sousa's most formidable rival a generation ago . . .

Maker of hundreds of phonograph records . . .

Recently on Federal relief rolls . . .

Creatore is coming here next Monday to conduct a symphony orchestra of 25 to 30 pieces at the Rialto, according to an announcement by Tom Moore, relayed through Publicity Distributor Jessie MacBride. Details were scarce, but it is promised that there will be four concerts daily, starting Monday, and that Creatore comes here as "guest conductor."

The musical program will supplement a screen presentation entitled "Brewster's Millions"—a familiar title—which stars Jack Buchanan and Lili Damita. This is an English version of George Barr McCutcheon's story. The silent film starred Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle about 15 years ago. Before that "Brewster's Millions" was a success on the comedy stage.

Tom Moore promised "something different" when he reopened the Rialto with a preview of "Harmony Lane" last Saturday night. He seems to be making good on it.

Shifts and Innovations.

Since we've started out by taking a peek into the rather immediate future, let's continue along the same line and consider that:

"Bonnie Scotland," with Laurel and Hardy, won't come to the Columbia Friday after all, as previously announced, because "China Seas" is doing so well in that F street location. So "China Seas," the Gable-Harlow-Berry melodrama, which tenanted the Palace for two weeks last month, stays at the Columbia for a second week. "Bonnie Scotland," meanwhile, is sidetracked.

"Radio's King of the Rhumba," known more conventionally as Xavier Cugat, brings his recording orchestra to the Earle stage September 20 for a one-week stay, flashes John J. Payette, general zone manager for Warner Brothers. The Barcelona maestro will be assisted by Raoul and Eva Reyes, rhumba-ists; Georges and Jalna, dancers also, and Carmen Castillo, Mexican singer, who for four years has been a Cugat rhythm fixture.

Carter Barron and Col. Angie Ratto have succumbed to popular demand and announce another Mickey Mouse-Silly Symphony symposium for the Palace. It will be held September 28, doors opening at 8:45 a. m. and the show beginning at 9:15. Subjects will include "Shanghai Micky," "Camping Out," "Playful Pluto," "Gulliver Mickey," "The China Shop," "Grasshopper and the Ant," "Funny Little Bunnies" and "The Wise Little Hen."

What? No "Water Babies!"

"My Heart Is Calling" will be succeeded by "The Man Who Knew Too Much" at the Belasco Saturday. A melodrama that invokes intrigue, kidnaping and murder, its star is Peter Lorre and the chief supporting player is Nova Pilbeam, the 14-year-old English girl who scored heavily in "Little Friend."

Reminding Washington's thousands of school children that vacation days are over, Phil Lampkin's contribution to the coming bill at Loew's Fox is an overture entitled "Back to School."

Charles Michelson, publicity director of the Democratic national committee; L. W. (Chip) Robert, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and other celebrities will attend the Variety Club's first fall luncheon at the Hotel Willard next Monday. Frank Boucher and Vincent Dougherty will officiate as kings for a day. They promise many novelties in the matter of entertainment so that the luncheon season may be started off with a "Boom!" and also something of a "Wow!"

Late Studio News.

Lloyd Corrigan, who directed that delightful color short called "La Cucaracha" which played RKO-Keith's a few months ago, has been signed to direct for Pioneer Pictures, makers of "Becky Sharp."

In case Edgar Norton has any relatives here, they may be interested to know he has been added to the cast of "Love Song," Lily Pons' debut picture.

"Our Gang Follies of 1936" went into production Monday with the reopening of the Hal Roach Hollywood studios.

His work in "A Tale of Two Cities" completed, Ronald Colman is on a desert holiday. He has a house about 20 miles from Palm Springs.

Steve Cochran, busy in New York preparing Ethel Barrymore for a road tour in "The Constant Wife," remits an announcement that the Clifford Brooke Academy of Stage Training in the Dramatic Arts, of which he is business manager, will open its fourth term October 7. We thought the name had been changed to the National Academy of Stage Training in the Dramatic Arts. Oh! We see. The Brooke goes on forever.

The Dueling Pistols, Perkins.

The studio battle over Mme. Schumann-Heink gets better and better . . . the Associated Press reports Will Hays has received Jesse Lasky's protest against the signing of the 74-year-old contralto by Metro-Goldwin-Mayer . . . it seems the diva went to Chicago after making a picture for Lasky . . . there she was signed to a contract by M-G-M, M. C. Levee scoring the beat after a dash by airplane . . . Lasky, Chicago-bound for the same purpose, arrived too late . . . now he is protesting to Czar Hays, involving the "star raiding" clause in the producers' code . . . Levee, acting for M-G-M, thinks his action was justified.

"East Lynne," which, like "Top Hat" and the aforementioned Brooke, threatens to go on forever, enters its fifth week tonight in the National Press Club auditorium. This anniversary performance will introduce the new policy of lower ticket fees and eat-and-drink-what-you-like.

Speaking of anniversaries yesterday marked the beginning of Mrs. Anna Mannix's eighth year as a ticket seller in Loew's Fox box office. In that time she has checked the circulation of many a counterfeit note. Many happy returns, Mrs. Mannix.

New Hagerstown Plea For Storm Sewer Likely

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 11.—A new application probably will be filed with State WPA headquarters by the mayor and city council for the construction of the $120,000 northwest storm water drain here, rejected Monday as a PWA project on the grounds that relief rolls here did not warrant such an expenditure.

City officials, headed by Mayor I. M. Wertz, conferred with Abel H. Wolman, who was informed that the project was urgent; that because of the lack of proper drainage in that section basements of scores of homes are flooded with each heavy rain.

Earle Going Burlesque Pro Tem

Ann Dvorak is Fay Wilson, wife and burlesque partner of Joe Wilson (Joe E. Brown) in "Bright Lights," the Earle's new screen feature for the week beginning Friday. She wears this unusual costume of bird of paradise feathers in the film.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Tintypes.

Hollywood, Sept. 11.

MARK SANDRICH directed the flicker "Top Hat."

Irving Berlin will sing his praises and Fred Astaire will join the dancing in the streets to show his appreciation. They talk freely of his contribution to the flicker.

When Astaire was making "The Gay Divorcee," also directed by Sandrich, he suggested the machine gun finish for a dance routine. Fred had used this in a Broadway musical. Sandrich liked it and said: "Save it for the next one, Fred. We'll spot it and give it a build up."

It was written into the scenario—the "Top Hat" number.

He worked on the scenario with the writers, and was in conferences with Berlin concerning the music.

It would be foolish to suggest that Sandrich gave Astaire a dance step or tossed Berlin a note for his music. He did, however, blend the story, the dances and the music into one structure. Everything was down on paper before a camera started turning. Every one knew what the other was doing, and they all worked together.

* * * *

When Sandrich goes on the set to actually direct a picture he never looks at the script. He believes he has worked on it enough to know it. If a dialogue point is lost he has the script girl read the lines.

He is not a noisy director. He seldom sits down. He talks calmly to the performers. He will explain a piece of business he desires to an actor without acting it out.

He will never start a flicker on a Friday. He will never okay the first take of the first scene.

He is 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighs 162 pounds, has hazel eyes, brown hair and is quick to grin.

* * * *

HE started in pictures, as many of the prominent directors did, serving his apprenticeship by making comedy shorts. He came to Hollywood to visit his cousin, who was directing Century Comedies for Abe and Julius Stern. The first Hollywood gags were pulled about them.

He suggested a comedy routine on the set and worked it out. He was offered a contract as assistant director for $20 a week. He accepted.

He worked as an assistant director at Fox and Warners. He next wrote shorts for Universal. Then he directed shorts for Educational. Finally blossomed forth as a full-fledged director of a feature. It was "Runaway Girls," with Shirley Mason, for Columbia. It was a silent flicker, released just as talkies came in.

He then left Hollywood and returned to New York. He was born in New York, in a house which stood on part of the site of City College. The date was October 26, 1900, and he arrived at 5 o'clock in the morning.

* * * *

WHEN he went back to New York, he hired a Pathe sound truck and roamed about the city making a short subject. It was called "There Is a Santa Claus." He made it especially for the holiday season, so he could get an immediate release and make some quick money.

He directed an Independent picture in the East, and also made a series of shorts for RKO. They gave him another chance in Hollywood. He really got started with the short, "So This Is Harris," which won the academy award. His first feature flicker was "The Melody Cruise," and he was directing Wheeler and Woolsey pictures when he was switched to Fred Astaire in "The Gay Divorcee."

He is an expert marksman; he loves horseback riding; he favors a bath to a shower and he plays five instruments—all badly.

He believed himself to be a fine football, baseball and basket ball player. He was on the teams at New Utrecht and Manual High School. It was when he went to Columbia that he discovered that he didn't play these games good enough.

* * * *
* * * *

Before entering pictures he had a strange job in New York. He used to take care of children. He organized a service and called for wealthy children when school was out for the day. It was his job to keep them off the streets and supply recreation for them. He would hire a tennis court or swimming pool and take the mob there.

He sleeps in pajamas, using both the trousers and the jacket. He is modest. He reads about three hours every day. He generally does most of his reading in bed. The blankets are generally on the floor in the morning.

His next flicker is the new Fred Astaire picture, "Follow the Fleet." This was decided while they were making "Top Hat." In a conference it was decided that Astaire shouldn't do another swank flicker in which he wears a tuxedo. They wanted to get something glamorous and an outfit in which Astaire would look good—a sailor suit.

Although he directed "Gay Divorcee" and "Top Hat," the screen's finest dancing films, he doesn't like dancing.

Concert at the Pan-American Union by the United States Marine Band, Capt. Taylor Branson, director; Mario Martinez Silveira, baritone soloist. Miscellaneous program of Latin-American music by 18 composers, representing Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Uruguay and Venezuela.

An audience which filled the Hall of the Americas to overflowing last night enjoyed compositions of southern provenance varying from operatic excerpts to sentimental songs. Most eminent of the composers on the program was Antonio Carlos Gomes, the Brazilian who won many a success with his operas in Italy before his death in 1896.

His overture to "Salvador Rosa," produced in Venice in 1874, is an item seldom heard these days, and in the performance by Capt. Branson's musicians it proved to be a thing of strength and passion, perhaps a little overemphatic but dramatically sincere none the less. Later in the program, Senor Silveira presented the "Song of the Adventurer" from "Il Guarani," the opera that is practically a synonym for Gomes. The lively aria has Verdian touches and a rousing rhythm.

Among the more interesting numbers were the fourth "Capricho Colombiano" of Emilio Murillo, in which the exotic rhythms of the pasillo, bambuco and torbellino are dextrously utilized, and Sambucetti's intermezzo, "Indiana," a pleasing and tuneful piece with instrumentation as deft as Bizet's.

The "Tonada," by Humberto Allende, of Chile, suggested in its polytonality that the composer is familiar with the scores of Milhaud and is not averse to modernism.

Senor Silveira, whose light and lyric barytone was occasionally strained in strenuous moments, sang two numbers from the cycle, "De mi Tierra," by Julian Osma, of Costa Rica; "El Zorzal," by Julian Aguirre, of Argentina; "Voy en Camino," by Alejandro Izaurraga, also of the Argentine, and a Chilean folk song.

Dawn Patrol.

New York, Sept. 11.

IN the city rooms of every big morning newspaper of the country, shirt-sleeved veterans of the front page kept the Death Watch as Huey Long's stream of life leaked out through a bullet hole . . . There is no sentiment, only grim efficiency, to the Death Watch of the city desks . . . At any moment, the bells will start ringing in the wire room and the printing machines will spell out "Flash—Huey Long dead" . . . In preparation for that terse message, desks must be cleared for immediate action, because down below in the streets, circulation department trucks are waiting to rush the extras to the newsstands, and there must be no break in the furious burst of speed that will get the printed papers to them . . . The city room is no place for novices when a big story is crackling, for the veterans go into action with incredible speed, and there is no place for the lame or the halt . . . I sat in with Frank Carson, Burke, Murphy and Max Annenberg as they kept the Death Watch on Huey Long.

* * * *

It was about 2 o'clock when I came into the city room, having deserted Broadway for this tenser setting . . . I stopped at the room where the A. P. and U. P. machines were chattering their metallic keys . . . The Associated Press machine was spelling this out: "Bulletin matter second add Long delirious Baton Rouge XXX at one time the stricken Senator recognized seymour Weiss and made an effort to address him but was able only to say 'Seymour' XXX D150 ACD" . . . I joined the group at the city desk, borrowed a cigarette and sat in.

* * * *

"It will be about 4 o'clock, New Orleans time, if he dies," said one of the old-timers . . . "They always die about that time; seems as though they have the slightest grip on life around 4 a. m." . . . "That would be 6 o'clock, our time," said another . . . The old-timer nodded . . . "If that's right," said the circulation department expert, "we'll catch about 150,000 papers on the four-star run" . . . The old-timer nodded: "You'll see," he said, and it seemed as though a cold wind had swept through the city room.

* * * *

Throughout the night, the machines spelled out the bulletins from Baton Rouge . . . Long's life was flowing out through the bullet hole in jerks and spasms . . . At 3 o'clock, Louisiana time, 4 a. m. New York time, the machines spelled out the fact that his relatives had been frantically summoned to the hospital room . . . A few minutes later, the machines tapped out the message that men had left the hospital to scour Baton Rouge for adrenalin, in the last desperate effort to spur the laggard heart . . . In fancy, as the machines printed the bulletin, you could hear the rush of feet, the high-pitched whine of motorcycle sirens through the darkened streets of Baton Rouge . . . But no matter how fast the motorcycles traveled, Death was traveling faster.

* * * *

Old stuff, this, to veterans of the desk and the circulation department . . . They had sat in at the Cermak death watch, the Harding death watch, the Sam Gompers death watch . . . Some of them went back as far as the shooting of young Marshall Field in Chicago, and one of them recalled the weary vigil as the presses waited for the death of Queen Victoria . . . Through their hands had passed the bulletins of the Titanic disaster, the sinking of the Lusitania, the killing of Legs Diamond, the shooting of Arnold Rothstein . . . They talked of these things as the hours passed on . . . At 6:10 a. m., New York time, the copy boy standing at the machines let out a scream that echoed shrilly through the city room . . . The United Press machine printed: "Flash Huey Long dead 6:10" . . . In a split second the men who had been lounging in the city room were in furious motion . . . At 6:13, three minutes later, the A. P. machine spelled out the news . . . A few minutes later, seven stories below, we could hear the hoarse hiccoughing of the trucks as they tore away through the city with the extras . . . Another Death Watch had been completed.

* * * *

Notes: Tom Pendergast, millionaire Kansas City political mogul, took a punch at Pat Knebelcamp at Aqueduct, but the story was hushed . . . Harry and Marje Rosenthal say it isn't so . . . Winnie Sheehan sends a letter from Paris, as full of high spirits as a boy holidaying . . . He insists that he made no Coast deal before sailing . . . I asked 11 stock exchange biggies their predictions on the Louis-Baer fight . . . Cyril de Cordova, Art Delaney, J. V. Bouviar 3d, Stuyvesant Fish, Earl Smith, Bill Curran, Frank Bliss and Jack Dunn, picked Louis . . . Peter Maloney and J. Lorimer Worden were the only Wall streeters to pick Baer . . . I didn't realize the Louis fever was so widespread . . . Frank Keeney bet $3,300 to $2,000 on Louis at the track . . . Jockey Sonny Workman is betting on Louis, $120 to $100 . . . Enric Madriguera goes into the Morrison, at Chicago . . .

Schofield Wins Delay In Auto Accident Case

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Sept. 11.—Unable to attend a hearing of charges of reckless driving, Rear Admiral Frank P. Schofield, retired, of Washington, was granted a postponement by Magistrate Walter E. Sinn in Peoples Court today. Admiral Schofield communicated with the magistrate and requested that the hearing be postponed.

A charge of reckless driving was made several weeks ago when the admiral's automobile skidded and struck Harvey Hargett, fracturing his leg. No date has been set for the trial, Magistrate Sinn said.

On The Air Today

"HARV and Esther" will be with you tonight. It's a backstage story with Teddy Bergman, Jack Arthur, Audrey Marsh, the Rhythm Girls and Victor Arden's Orchestra. "Harv" is a salesman; "Esther," his wife. Bequeathed a theater, Harv decides to become a producer, with the moral backing of his friend and yer, played by Bergman.

Bergman was most recently heard on the air in "Joe Palooka." He also has done the comic sequences in Pathe News Reels, so his voice may be familiar to you in that way. "Harv and Esther" begin at WJSV, at 7 p. m.

The Music Hall, with Paul Whiteman, is going variety tonight—something akin, apparently, to the Vallee show. A new program policy will bring notable guest artists, although Helen Jepson, Ramona, Bob Lawrence, the King's Men and others of the Music Hall personnel will be heard as usual.

For the opening of the new fall show Whiteman presents Mischa Levitzky, American concert pianist; Michael Bartlett, screen and opera star; June Knight, of the films and musical comedy, and Bobby Burns, the bazooka-tooting comedian who has been heard in the Vallee Hour.

• • • •

Vallee, on the other hand, is not being outdone tonight. He presents a double-barreled guest program with Malcolm Campbell, who will tell of his 300-mile-an-hour spin across the Utah salt flats, and Leo Carillo, who made so many friends among Washingtonians in a recent personal appearance at the Earle Theater. It will be Campbell's first public appearance since breaking his own speed record a few days ago. Raphael, one of the world's best concertina (accordian to you) players, adds a group of numbers to the musical portions of the hour.

• • • •

The Show Boat is presenting an all-request program tonight, WRC, at 8, when Capt. Henry and crew make a mythical visit to Huntington, W. Va. It includes a wide range of songs which can be appraised best in the following program schedule:

Phil Regan, of the films, makes his radio debut at 6:45 p. m., WMAL, in a quarter hour with Harry Jackson's orchestra from Hollywood . . . Frank Black and the NBC Symphony present Richard Strauss' symphonic suite "Burger als Edelmann" for the first time in this country, WMAL, at 9 . . . CBS will give Friday the 13th a preview (WJSV at 7:30) through a series of sketches in which superstitions are tracked down and their absurdities proved.

Helen Hayes has selected "The New Penny," an original play by Edith Meiser, author of the "Sherlock Holmes" scripts, for her first broadcast October 1 . . . Aunt Sue and Polly celebrate their fourth anniversary at WMAL late this month . . . Bob Crosby (Bing's brother) makes his network debut with his own orchestra in October . . . Eddie Cantor has selected Gus Arnheim as his first guest conductor when the banjo-eyed comedian's new show begins October 6.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go
The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.
Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

Wanted: Taxes For Revenue.

From various indications, rather intangible but unmistakable, it appears that the share-the-wealth program of the late Senator Long has been losing some of its pristine popular appeal during recent months. Mr. Long's death will without doubt seriously sap the already weakened vitality of the movement so closely associated with his name and reduce the danger of further tax legislation of a confiscatory nature. However, the new taxes voted at the end of the last session of Congress remain as a legacy of the late Senator from Louisiana and a testimonial to the fear with which he had inspired the Administration by his clamorous appeals.

With the subsidence of the agitation in favor of using the taxing power as an instrumentality for the reapportionment of wealth, it is to be hoped that Congress will have the courage to pass a bona-fide tax program to raise needed revenues. So long as outlays continue on the present scale, the hopelessness of making any perceptible impression upon the huge deficit by voting new taxes is a deterrent to action. However, Secretary Morgenthau is showing an unwonted concern about the size of the deficit. Although he has not yet reached the stage of demanding retrenchments in the general spending program, he has begun to stress the importance of eliminating wastes in the disbursement of appropriated funds. In course of time he may progress to recommending plans for specific economies.

The next step toward a balanced budget calls for new taxes designed to yield sums far in excess of the meager returns obtainable by the recently imposed levies upon large incomes and estates. Congress and the Administration will have to ignore the demands of the advocates of wealth sharing and have the courage to broaden the tax base if a balanced budget is to be attained, and the Government's credit to be saved from the ravages of deficit financing.

The Disputed District Line.

It is too frequently assumed that the task of the Virginia-District Boundary Commission is merely to draw between the two jurisdictions a line that will be satisfactory to Congress and the Legislature at Richmond. Actually the more important question is who owns the property in the disputed area across the Potomac. That issue has kept some of the Department of Justice's most capable attorneys busy for many months.

An agreement has been reached as to the boundary between the District and Alexandria. Somewhat different issues are involved in the remaining controversy. Yet the legal structure on which this agreement is based has a direct bearing upon the ownership of a considerable part of Washington Airport and Roaches Run. Counsel for Alexandria recognize that the legal boundary is the high-water mark on the southern shore of the Potomac River in 1791, as changed by prescription. Acceptance by the State of this viewpoint, which has been repeatedly upheld by the Supreme Court, would probably mean that a large part of the airport site belongs to the Government; for this property was originally part of the river and, according to testimony presented at the hearing, has been filled within comparatively recent years.

The decision as to the ownership of this area may also be the determining factor in the location of a permanent boundary line. Already the Government holds undisputed title to considerable land just south of the Potomac opposite Washington. Proper development of this section is of the utmost importance to the Capital City. Since it will undoubtedly remain in Federal possession, it may be logically included within the District.

Virginia has asked the commission to draw the line at the low-water mark on the south Potomac shore. That would, in most seasons, place part of the river in Virginia, thus leading to a confusion of jurisdiction over it. Moreover, it would mean actual contraction of the District at a time when the Capital City is far overrunning its boundaries. If the line is to be moved from where it was originally drawn, it should be pushed to the southwest to permit harmonious development of both banks of the river.

John Bull Speaks Out.

Many notable speeches have been made before the Assembly of the League of Nations, now holding its sixteenth annual session at Geneva. But it is doubtful whether in all these years there has been an address to that international parliament comparable in importance with that delivered by Sir Samuel Hoare yesterday.

That the British foreign minister should in this crisis urge upon the League "steady collective resistance against all acts of unprovoked aggression" was striking enough in itself. For this is nothing less than an acceptance of the challenge hurled by Mussolini in claiming right to a complete freedom of action in dealing with Ethiopia. And it is a challenge accepted in the face of Italian statements that League sanctions—implied by the phrase "steady collective resistance"—would be regarded as hostile acts. With such a challenge given and accepted the drama at Geneva has, at long last, really entered the crisis stage.

But the spokesman of the British government did not stop at urging the members of the League to unite in exercising tangible pressure on the great nation which is now preparing to jeopardize world peace. He further said that without the creation of an effective common front against the aggressor the "main bridge" binding England to the Continent will collapse.

This is clear intimation that the British government would endeavor to be neutral if an Italo-Ethiopian war, unchecked now, should develop into a general European conflict. The remark is not, as the Italian delegates assert, a British threat to quit the League. It is rather a prediction that the League will cease to have any reality unless it squarely confronts the tremendous issue raised by the Fascist dictator. Therefore it becomes a plea to all nations interested in orderly international co-operation to support the British stand to the end that war may be averted.

That stand, over and above the specific British interests involved, is designed to answer the question of whether or not a single jingoistic government shall be permitted by the rest of the world to upset, at the pleasure of a dictator, the entire structure of civilization. Soon or late this issue has to be squarely faced.

A widespread will to peace, as pacifists have too long refused to realize, is not enough. A single man like Mussolini wields more power in the world today than 40,000,000 pacifists. And a man like Mussolini recognizes only physical pressure, backed if necessary by the same weapons in which he puts his faith. None can call post-war Britain a belligerent nation. But it is sufficiently alive to its long-range interests, and sufficiently free from muddle-headed pacifism, to realize that nothing short of the sternest resolution will stop Italy now. Such resolution the British foreign minister urges upon other members of the League in a message the implications of which every national government, including our own, must weigh most carefully.

Unquestionably Sir Samuel Hoare had the tacit support of the French government in making this declaration of British policy. And this must mean that the wavering period in Paris is coming to an end, and that France is lining up with her sister democracy against the active threat of Mussolini—and the latent threat of Hitler—to European peace. Confronted by this pressure, Italy, already mobilized and armed to the teeth in a way unnecessary for any colonial war, must make one of the most epic decisions of history.

A vital part of the British foreign minister's speech, advocating peaceful reorganization of imperialistic control over backward areas, was clearly designed to facilitate any compromise which Italy may be prepared to accept. And these placatory remarks were probably addressed almost as much to German as to Italian grievances. It was still the olive branch which Sir Samuel tendered to Italy at Geneva yesterday, in the presence of the delegates from some fifty nations. But behind an olive branch from which recent events have stripped much foliage it is plain to see that the British sword is not yet rusted to its scabbard, and that Great Britain is prepared to back fair words for peace with acts.

"Nuts."

"Sunny Jim" Farley is without question the country's leading prognosticator. By laborious work and more than a smattering of good luck he has built up the reputation of an infallible (or relatively infallible) political prophet. There was a time when "Sunny Jim" ventured his opinions. Now he thunders his conclusions, like the Delphic oracle.

If any one has any doubt regarding the outcome of the next election, let him call on the Postmaster General for sweet assurance. For Mr. Farley knows that coming events cast their shadows before. And he has sufficiently projected himself into the shadows of 1936, in spite of his sunny disposition, to know that the President will be unanimously renominated; that he will be re-elected by a sweep as majestic as that of 1932; that it is futile for the Republican Party to tear its hair over the lack of an outstanding candidate or a coherent program. In short, Mr. Farley has the election in the bag nearly 14 months before the final ballots will be cast.

There is, however, one field in which Mr. Farley's predictions have been deficient. In spite of obvious public interest, he has not yet foretold the date of his retirement from his secondary position as Postmaster General. And when a newspaperman, aping "Sunny Jim's" own tactics, forecast that resignation for January 8, the great prognosticator announced in anger, "The man who wrote that piece is nuts."

Is it possible that the prophet of the New Deal has overlooked the importance of the one subject on which he is most competent to predict? Certainly his prospective elimination from the Cabinet, along with his spoils system, looms up with much greater significance just now than any premature chatter regarding the events of November, 1936.

Work Relief Without Work.

According to New York City's park commissioner the Works Progress Administration, under the local direction of Gen. Johnson, has added over 11,000 men to the small army of relief workers previously employed on park projects.

In a letter of protest to Mayor LaGuardia and on other occasions, Commissioner Moses has rivaled Gen. Johnson in vivid language to express his feelings about the methods employed by the WPA in carrying out its so-called work-relief program. He alleges that Gen. Johnson's assistants "make not the slightest pretense of consulting local officials" and accuses them of "stupid, arbitrary and arrogant action," in dumping people unsuited for the work into city parks and playgrounds, without advance notice and without provision for their supervision.

The park commissioner says that in spite of the refusal of his department to take on additional men the rejected were ordered to remain in the parks and told that they would be paid even if they did not work. As a result, he charges that "hundreds of men have been lying around in the parks doing absolutely nothing except jeering at workers, shooting craps, drinking, and generally creating a nuisance and a menace to the public." In an even more unrestrained unofficial outburst Mr. Moses has threatened to throw out of the parks the whole "lot of bums, riff-raff and jailbirds picked up by the police, sent to court and then shipped over to us by way of the relief stations."

Although Gen. Johnson had recourse to shouting and fist-pounding to emphasize indignation, his refutation of these slanderous assertions lacked the customary punch. Instead he charged Mr. Moses with a failure to distinguish between "bums" and destitute men, and hurled back his complaint of non-cooperation. He made one relevant and highly significant point, however, when he announced that Federal money "will be expended under Federal rules and regulations." In plain language that means that a New York City official, however, able and conscientious he may be, has no business whatever to interfere with Federal relief administrators even if they invade his field of work and demoralize the personnel of the organization under his control.

Gen. Johnson is not to blame for the clash between the WPA and the Park Department of New York City. He is merely a subordinate under orders to remove people from relief rolls and put them to work in record quick time. Like a good soldier, he does not stop to reason why, but follows his commander, Administrator Hopkins. Upon the shoulders of the latter rests full responsibility for insisting upon retention of a type of work relief that threatens to develop into an appalling national scandal.

On a less conspicuous scale conflicts similar to that now raging in New York City will doubtless arise in other communities if the Hopkins system is not modified to permit of a more rational and better-coordinated type of relief work. There should be an immediate and searching investigation of the charges preferred by Commissioner Moses. Where there is so much smoke there must be a good deal of fire. And the conflagration must be brought under control before it has further consumed resources needed to bring constructive relief to the unemployed.

Too Hopeless.

New York is again—or still—in a dither about noises. All sorts of organizations are combating the decibels manufactured by trucks, radios, milkmen, garbage collectors and rattling manholes. And now the police have taken a hand, arresting a dozen crapshooters down an alley, for making unnecessary noises, as crapshooters will, in the wee sma' hours. All of which, inspired by Mayor LaGuardia, is very laudable and probably quite useless.

To stop New York's cacophony, deplorable or otherwise, would be a terrific task. Nor might the result be as pleasing as one might suspect. Apocryphal, but not entirely without truth, is the story of the New Yorker who could not sleep in the country because of the unbearable silence. Noise goes with urban existence and modern ears and nerves are attuned to its strain. Nevertheless, New Yorkers and all other city dwellers have some reason to complain at the excess of banging and we, in the past, have waxed wrathy over some of Washington's milder nocturnal disturbances. Nor is our dislike on the wane.

Now that they are getting the street cars off Connecticut avenue the sound of slamming automobile doors comes even louder than it did. Once a myriad of rackets (old style) were hidden by the overwhelming disturbance furnished gratis and in quantity by the traction company. Now these minor chords are plainer to the ear. There is no balm in Gilead for lovers of silence. If they invented silent automobile doors and enforced their usage there would still be the neighbors' cats. And if cats were banned, there would still be the neighbors.

New Frontiers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to comment on the very fine thought of Lucille Chase Miller in "Youth's Future," carried in The Post of September 8. Recognizing that our country is a leading creditor nation and bemoaning the fact that we have no more frontiers to conquer, Mrs. Miller seems disturbed that our educated youth "has no place for their talents and training," in the continental United States. This seems a rather pessimistic outlook—especially so if we do not take a different slant on the word "frontiers."

It is true that continental United States offers no more Indians to kill off, no more great transcontinental railroads to build, no more millions of virgin wheat lands to plow, and in the ordinary sense of the word "barbaric," no more barbaric peoples to conquer. But is this not the wrong idea of "frontier" in our modern civilization?

It would seem that the frontiers have moved back to the land of the first settlements as much as they exist in the West. Our present frontier is everywhere in the United States in the form of many new problems, such as social adjustments to new economic conditions. It would seem unduly pessimistic to think of these new frontiers in terms of a static condition. For there is no reason to believe that there will be lack of interest and enthusiasm in the execution of all the various social security laws recently passed by our generous Congress

Cannot the daring adventurous youth find interest in the new frontiers, working out better social relationships in the populous sections of the United States just as they did as pioneer engineers fighting Indians in the days when we had the other kind of frontiers? Has not the groundwork been laid for the employment of thousands, within the next few years, battling the new frontiers which have existed for some time but have more recently been recognized because of the five years of withholding of capital for the payment of laborers?

It seems to the writer that there are actually thousands of frontiers yet to conquer, but they are in a different form now than half a century ago. The very fact that there was an NRA, that there is a Security Exchange Commission, that there is a Social Security law, that there is a Public Utility Holding Company law, that there is a Tennessee Valley Authority law, etc., —all attest to the recognition of public authority that the frontier has changed. The slum living sections of Washington and other large cities is also evidence that the frontier still exists but in a different form.

The writer thinks that the new frontier does not imply a static condition where youth will be merely content with security, but rather an opportunity where all will have a chance to become fighters for better social adjustment between all factors of society. This should prove interesting and afford a good fight as in the old days, when the frontier was the West.

Six Months Culture.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The timeliness of your editorials continues to impress me. The one of September 9, "Culture Or Camouflage," was especially fine. Culture is the growth of centuries. To attempt to create it overnight is simply absurd, and will expose us to the ridicule of the world. You have punctured the bubble.

It is difficult to believe that our Government is sincere in this effort. And the lurking suspicion grows that public funds are being used for partisan purposes. It is difficult to believe that this large sum of $27,000,000 will go to the aid of really deserving artists and musicians, or that it will have any appreciable effect upon unemployment. HONESTY.
Washington, Sept. 10.

Revolutionary Parties.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a letter published in your issue of September 5, E. N. Blye, of Chicago, deplores the recognition of Russia by the United States, stating, among other things, that such recognition has increased communistic activities in this country.

Mr. Blye fears for the future of the United States—or to be more exact, he fears that the menace "Communism" in America will be the undoing of the capitalistic system here. Mr. Blye need have no such fear. He need only to study carefully the platform of the Communist Party of America, and his misgivings will disappear; he will then see that, from the point of view of the capitalist class, there is nothing to fear of this organization. Though it may parade under the label of Communism, it asks for nothing more than that the workers should be made a little more comfortable under a system long ready for the scrap heap; it calls for a few sops here and a few sops there. To reform a system can mean only the perpetuation of it.

There is, however, an organization of revolutionary socialism in this country—the Socialist Labor Party—which for nearly half a century has maintained a laboratory for the study of social sciences, from which has been issued to the workers of this country the message of revolutionary socialism. The Socialist Labor Party alone is the party of true Marxian Socialism in America. All other so-called "revolutionary" parties in America look only toward the reforming of a system far beyond the stage of reform. M. B.
Washington, Sept. 9.

Logic Would End Democracy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Judging Mr. Farley's guesswork by the past Mr. Roosevelt is as good as reelected right now, with a certainty as deadly as a Digest poll. Mr. Farley has been beating the almanac.

Because of the lengthy period likely to be required for the workout of the Administration's present program, it is possible that the 1940 election will send still another Democrat to the White House, and that the two-party system may be gravely endangered. The present term has, so far, certainly been a one-party affair.

Since the Republicans seem not to have even a remote chance to win in 1936, doesn't it behoove them so to organize and deport themselves as to acquire some of the credit for the result in the 1936 campaign, instead of acting as mere bolters as in the last, and thus secure a working interest in the 1936 Administration and increase their chances in 1940?

To this end it is suggested that they put out no ticket in 1936, but rehabilitate and conserve their campaign finances and connive or bargain with the Democrats who are thus spared campaign outlay, to wink at the comeback of some of their best men in 1936 who were let out in 1932 and 1934, so as to recover some semblance, at least, of a two-party Government. Some of these gentlemen have been missed.

The Republicans can get a good trade out of the Democrats if they will agree to help them change the Senate rules to limit debate in that body.

One of the most appealing benefits of the aforementioned arrangement would be the vast conservation in the volume of perfervid campaign oratory.

GEORGE E. GARY.
Rome, Ga., Sept. 7.

The Playground Of Hurricanes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With many years' experience on the east coast of Florida and having been on many of the keys, including the two Matacumbas, I want to say that there can be no reasonable excuse for allowing the veterans to remain on the low-lying keys and in flimsily constructed shacks during the known "hurricane season."

Every resident on the lower Florida coast realizes as the hurricane season approaches that one may come. It is common talk among the old settlers. Especially is this true after a warning has been sent out by the Weather Bureau that a hurricane is developing in the West Indies. And when one starts on its northerly course, no human mind can long foretell where it will strike.

I have been through several of the hurricanes that hit the coast north of the keys. My experience was more than 40 years ago, during part of which time I was deputy collector of customs in charge of the port of New Smyrna. We looked for a hurricane every few years. We always knew one was coming several hours beforehand. High winds and misty squalls, with many gulls and other shore birds flying inland, invariably foretold a hurricane would follow. This gave us time to prepare for it by cutting pine trees and propping up the house on the leeward side, sometimes boarding up the windows on that side.

On the first report of the Weather Bureau that a hurricane was developing in the West Indies, those on the spot in charge of the veterans' camps should have removed the men by prearranged transportation. There was time to do this Sunday if the trains had been ordered. But it seems that the authorities were waiting to see if a hurricane would hit or miss the camps!

All of the keys are composed of coraline rock, which crops out on the surface. That is the reason the keys have not been washed away long ago. There is little soil on the rock. What there is usually occupies holes or depressions. Nearly every key is subject to overflow during extra high tides. Some of the keys have heavy growths of forest trees—palms, gumbolimbo, mangrove, etc. Other keys have low-lying shrubs and tangled vines.

Lower Matacumba is about 20 miles from the mainland, where the winds have a clean sweep, with no protection whatever except the poorly constructed, one-story shacks, sometimes referred to as "buildings." CHARLES H. COE.

The Post Impressionist

Dogs, Doctors, Sun And Noise.

Post Office, Thursday.

OLD George Herbert declared: "The heart's letter is read in the eyes"—by which, not intending "read" for "red," he referred to a love-letter. He didn't go on to say that a love-letter is good for sore eyes (and bad for the nerves), though he might have. What we should like to know is what he would have done with the far-from-love-letters that come to this Column. Despite all the will in the world, we have neither time to answer nor space to publish most of them.

* * *

Here's quite the best we can do, in the latter respect, with the lot now on hand.

Some while ago, we paraphrased, from The Telephone News, of New Haven, Conn., a story about Dandy, a Mrs. Fish's dog, in Mystic, who wouldn't be sent home, when calling on a distant neighbor, until his mistress did the calling: i. e., called him by telephone. Now Mr. P. C. Mabon, editor of our esteemed contemporary above mentioned, writes:

"Very naturally, we were tickled to death to think that you were so interestel in the story, but I notice that there is a faint air of skepticism surrounding your published remarks about it. You might, therefore, be glad to know that, before printing it in The Telephone News, I was careful to have it authenticated by Mrs. Fish herself."

We never really did doubt Dandy. Nevertheless, we hasten apologies for our ambiguity.

* * *

And now, Mr. Mabon, we wish you would tell us what to do about our own dog. He lingers around houses so uncivilized as to be telephoneless.

Do you think we might try thought-transferrence?

Next, this from Mr. Freeman:

Dear Post-Impressionist: I read the following in the London Times. "At an inquest at Weymouth on Thursday on the body of June Hallett, 76, a visitor from Stoke-under-Ham, who collapsed from the heat, it was stated that she was wearing 14 garments. A verdict of 'Death from natural causes' was returned." What is the matter with the sense of humor of the British press?

A. F. FREEMAN.
Alexandria.

Nothing, we suspect. We suspect the poor woman's sponsors in baptism.

And then:

Dear Post-Impressionist: During my just completed vacation in the Adirondacks, I was struck by a flagrant example of something you might dress-up for your Column. I refer to the self-so-called "unbeliever" with a readiness to believe anything so long as it is patently unbelievable and has nothing to do with spiritual beliefs.

The "unbeliever's" faith in the infinity of the finite is in exactly inverse ratio to his denial of the Infinite. His eagerness to believe a pseudo-scientific yarn that, on the face of it, must be at least an exaggeration is pathetic—yet this is more than equalled by his eagerness to exaggerate, in his own turn, any such exaggeration.

I encountered one proud "unbeliever" who led a conversation regarding the Canadian physician (Rex Beach recently wrote a magazine-article about him) who is supposed to cure arthritis and kindred ailments by manipulation of the patient's feet. My Adirondack pest declared, admiringly, that this doctor treated from 1,500 to 2,000 patients a day. Imagine that! If he treated patients the whole 24 hours—not stopping to sleep or eat—and gave each patient merely one minute's treatment, he could handle only 1,440 patients per day.

There are but 60 minutes to the hour. Yet the unbeliever who denies Joshua can believe that there may be an infinity of them.

G. O. BASCELL.
Washington.

Yes, we could "dress-up" the incredible credulity of the incredulous.

But hasn't Mr. Bascell given it a sufficient dressing-down?

Dear Post-Impressionist: New York's anti-noise campaign and transients' and residents' criticism of Washington's noises could well be extended. Now that you have taken to parodies of popular songs—and now when the "decibels" from the District of Columbia begin to slosh over neighboring States—one is provoked to such doggerel as the following:

A HOME OUT OF RANGE.

Oh, give me a home not so near the airdrome
Whence the blimps and the aeroplanes stray;
One where seldom is heard a mechanical bird
And the skies are not crowded all day!

Ballston, Va. ARLINGTON.

Exactly: It all depends on whether or not you are on the side of the angels or on that of the Prince of the Powers of the Air—whether you are for the Right of Way or the Light of Day.

None To Fill His Shoes.

New York, Sept. 11.

JUST to keep the record straight, let it be remembered that it was Huey Long who first resorted to the use of guns in the political fight which led to his assassination.

It was Huey who often called up the troops, issuing his orders through his Governor, Oscar Allen, to intimidate those people who saw their citizenship being wrested from them and realized that they were being reduced to the ignominious political status of the Negro, who had no rights and no redress in Louisiana.

It was Huey who enacted a State law about a year ago authorizing himself to use bayonets and machine guns at his own discretion, to intimidate dissenters without even the necessity for a pretext and forbidding the courts to interfere. Huey was the one who created another mobile, arrogant army in the guise of a State highway police whose members were answerable to him alone for anything that they might do to American citizens who resisted.

And, finally, Huey enlarged an obscure finger-print bureau known as the Criminal Identification Department to unlimited size and converted it into a secret organization for espionage, intimidation and strong-arm work.

• • • •

UNDER these conditions the people who regarded their citizenship as an important privilege were placed in an exasperating situation. If they rebelled they put themselves in rebellion against troops who carried the American flag. They could be shot down by American soldiers or by policemen representing their State government for defending their rights as American citizens.

It is true that Huey never was called on to use his power to the full. The mere presence of young militiamen under arms, the mere existence of the highway police and the Louisiana Cheka were enough. Of course, there was occasional talk of a march of angry Americans armed with hunting rifles and household pistols. One old man who took part in the blood purge in New Orleans which cleared out the carpet-baggers after the Civil War openly volunteered a year ago to get down his ancient musket and fight once more. However, there was no leadership, and the decent, conscientious element, including farmers and villagers, were embarrassed by the fact that they found themselves united in a common enmity with the political hacks and thieves of New Orleans. It is a mistake to believe that Huey was opposed only in New Orleans. Revolt smoldered also in Baton Rouge and a half-dozen other counties or parishes whose people had no use for the cold, crooked regular organization in New Orleans.

• • • •

IN all not more than a half-dozen shots were fired by Huey's troops, and these incidents were all due to accidents. One young militiaman was killed, and it was fortunate for Huey that this was not the youth whose father wired Huey last fall, "If any harm comes to my boy I will kill you like any other dog." The father resented Huey's misuse of his son to bring off a political coup by armed force, but the boy was oath-bound and he had to bear arms for any purpose which the dictator deemed desirable.

But the force was there, and the character of the force may be judged from the fact that Huey's bodyguard continued to pour bullets into the dead body of Dr. Carl Weiss on the State house floor in Baton Rouge, in sheer rage, when it must have been obvious that the man was dead. The character of the force is indicated, too, by the order of Col. E. P. Roy, commander of the highway police, to shoot any photographer caught making pictures around the capitol or the hospital where Huey died.

It was not necessary for the bodyguard to shoot Giuseppe Zangara, who missed Franklin Roosevelt but hit Tony Cermak. It wasn't necessary for McKinley's guards to shoot Leon Czolgosz, nor for Theodore Roosevelt's escort to shoot John Shrank. They were disarmed and captured by hand. Possibly, under conditions in Baton Rouge, there was nothing else to do but shoot Dr. Weiss once or even twice, but mutilation of a corpse is a practice frowned upon by the rules of civilized warfare.

NOW what happens in Louisiana?

Huey, like Mussolini, had no second in command. He was the dictator, the State, the law and the discipline of his gang. He was a ruthless genius, but there wasn't a man in all his following who was fit to carry his coat, much less pick up his clattering tin sword off the marble floor of Huey's own State capitol and carry on. The dictator's laws remain on the books for the time being, but on neither side of the political conflict was there another comparable leader. There are no smart men in the opposition, and Huey's following, though schooled in brutal cynicism, does not contain a man with the remarkable intelligence, the gall and the wily hypocrisy of the fallen duce.

Probably Huey's gang will now fall to undisciplined grafting, to loot the State of every dollar, privilege and property that can be stolen by a demoralized army in flight. There will be jealousy and fights among them, and the opposition will gain confidence correspondingly. But if the upshot of all is the re-establishment of the status quo ante-Huey, Louisiana will be no better off than she was in Huey's time. For Huey Long's dictatorship, violent and degrading as it was, never was any more crooked than the democracy which it displaced.

American Verse

By William Lyon Phelps

A. C. WARD, a British critic, has just produced a pocket-size volume of about 350 pages (published by the Oxford University Press, New York) called "A Book of American Verse."

The selections begin with verses written by colonials in the early seventeenth century, and end with T. S. Eliot and Edna St. Vincent Millay.

It is not certain that all American critics would agree with the editor, when he says:

"Whitman excepted, they have hardly produced a poet who sets his own standards and establishes a claim to be considered among the world's original geniuses. England, however, has no woman poet who is certainly superior to Emily Dickinson, and none who is consistently her equal in originality, depth, and power of compression. Emily Bronte and Alice Meynell may be on her level at moments; Emily Bronte could be more tempestuously stark and Alice Meynell more luminously serene."

Well, I think two poets as different from each other as two poets could possibly be, both set their own standards and are among the world's original geniuses. They are Poe and Emerson.

Hell-Bent For Election

New Deal Has Only Kept Promises Of Insignificance.

James P. Warburg, formerly one of the economic advisers of President Roosevelt, who appointed him financial adviser to American delegation to the World Economic Conference in 1933, has written an appraisal of the New Deal, the fifth chapter of which appears today. Mr. Warburg has long been a personal friend of Mr. Roosevelt. He has given his appraisal the general title, "Hell-Bent for Election." These articles do not necessarily reflect the editorial opinion of The Post. They are presented as an authoritative and penetrating analysis.

V.

By James P. Warburg.

IT would be an easy matter to continue quite a little further the comparison being discussed in these articles between the Democratic and Socialist platforms of 1932, but I think the point has already been made sufficiently clear. One might point out, for example, that recognition of Soviet Russia—which may have been a good or a bad thing—was a plank in the Socialist platform, but that neither Mr. Roosevelt nor the Democratic party let us in on the secret that it would be one of the first acts of the New Dealers when they came into power. Similarly, one may be for or against the elimination of tax-exempt securities; it was called for by the Socialist platform—not by the Democratic; Roosevelt is on record as favoring action toward this end.

To the reader who would like to pursue this matter further I recommend a careful reading of Dr. Tugwell's various writings, and a study of what avowed Socialists have to say about the New Deal.

I shall deal here with only one further item in the comparison. In a way it is the most important item of all.

Probably the reaction produced in the reader by what I have said so far is one of unpleasant surprise at the degree to which Mr. Roosevelt has fulfilled the promises of the Socialist platform. Most of us, I think, are only vaguely aware of what Socialism is or what Mr. Thomas promised in his platform. But the reader would at this point probably console himself with an observation something like this:

"After all, socialism means public ownership of property as opposed to the private ownership to which we are accustomed under capitalism. What harm is there in it if Mr. Roosevelt adopted a few planks from the Socialist platform—what harm is there in it if he tries to improve the conditions of labor and agriculture—so long as the essential aim of Socialism, the public ownership of property, remains unrealized?"

• • • •

TO this very reasonable and probable reaction on the part of the reader I should like to make answer as follows:

1. Mr. Roosevelt's Secretary of the Treasury is publicly on record as favoring the ownership by the United States Treasury of the Federal Reserve banks.

2. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce is publicly on record as favoring Government ownership of the railroads.

3. The Tennessee Valley Authority exists and is operating. It is a huge power producing and distributing unit, set up in a region which was previously served by private industry. Mr. Norman Thomas commends it as an excellent example of pure socialism.

The Administration has publicized exceedingly well its "yardstick rates" in the Tennessee Valley. It has publicized less well the cost of the project. We have heard vaguely of an expenditure of $50,000,000, and when billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money are being tossed around a mere $50,000,000 does not seem like very much.

But—it is not a mere $50,000,000 that is being spent in the Tennessee Valley. The plain truth of it is that the expenditures in the Tennessee Valley alone in the next five years will be something in excess of $300,000,000, and eventually something like a billion dollars.

That is on one item.

The Administration's power projects form a network over the entire country. So far over $300,000,000 have been allotted on so-called "make-ready appropriations." Much larger bills are to come.

The announced purpose is to bring light and power at less cost to the consumer.

The probable result will be the partial elimination of the private power companies, which means the partial wiping out of the savings of some 5,500,000 investors.

And so far as cheaper light and power are concerned, Mr. Roosevelt said in a recent broadcast, "Facts are relentless."

So they are.

The fact here is:

If you deduct the subsidy of taxpayers' money from the Tennessee Valley Authority and from its rates now in effect, the "yardstick rates" of which the Administration speaks so proudly are higher than the rates charged by the private companies serving the same territory; and, even with the advantages of the subsidies for which the taxpayer foots the bill, they are but slightly lower.

• • • •

WHAT has happened in the Tennessee Valley will doubtless happen in all other Government projects. It is difficult to see how it can be otherwise.

The taxpayer will always have to foot the bill for such "examples of pure socialism."

In addition to pointing out these significant items, I should like to draw the reader's attention to one other fact. We are living in a time when it is fashionable to be "social-minded." That in itself is a good thing. But we make the mistake of taking for granted that anything that is proposed for the good of the less fortunate elements in our social structure will actually redound to their benefit.

If socialism really would be such a great thing for American labor, why is the American Federation of Labor opposed to it?

If Mr. Roosevelt is right in thinking that when we voted for him in 1932 we were really voting for what he has since given us—why did the Socialists poll only 884,781 votess?

Was it just because the American people liked Mr. Roosevelt so much better than Mr. Thomas?

Let me stress once more that this chapter is not intended as an argument against socialism. I am against socialism, and even more against its two misbegotten offspring, communism and fascism. But I am not arguing that case here. I am concerned solely with finding a fair answer to the first of our four questions.

"How have Mr. Roosevelt's actions since he became President compared with his statements and promises, on the strength of which he was elected in November, 1932?"

I think a fair answer would be the following:

"He has done a few things that he promised to do—more things that he promised not to do—and still more things that his Socialist opponent promised to do."

In order to evaluate properly the true significance of this answer I think it is necessary to add:

"He has carried out his promises where it mattered least and failed to do so where it mattered most."

He carried out, for example, the promises to repeal the eighteenth amendment (which would probably have been repealed under any administration); to give independence to the Philippines; to get us to adhere to the World Court (without success); and to put through the St. Lawrence waterways treaty (also without success).

He brought about a certain amount of hasty reform of our banking and investment system; the problem is by no means solved and requires careful study in order that the much needed real reform may some day be accomplished.

On the negative side he has failed to reduce the cost of Federal Government, to balance the budget, to maintain a "sound currency," to take Government out of business, or to maintain the fundamental principles of the American order.

He has led us into an orgy of wild spending undreamed of prior to his Administration, "piled commission on commission and bureau on bureau," and set up, or tried to set up, a Federal dictatorship over all the various factors that affect the lives of our citizens.

He has flouted the Constitution which he swore on oath to support.

He has made a laughing stock of the sanctity of our national promises.

And he has done all this in the name of an emergency which—if it ever did justify such actions—certainly justifies them no longer.

No End of Books

The Fine Brounian Frenzy.

GIVE Heywood Broun even a second-hand lever-action job press with which to get out his daily column, and I'll go along to the desert island with him any time. In the field of newspaper commenting—born of seventeenth century pamphleteering, heir-apparent of the last century's great tradition of editorial writing—the bulky broth of a boy from Brooklyn, who doesn't care a hang how his pants fit him, heads my ticket of Favorite Reading. And as the official at Cowes said to Queen Victoria when the American yacht came in first, "Your Majesty, there is no second."

Of course, with Mr. Pegler sitting right over there in the aisle seat, this may not be the best of manners on my part. And any further mention of names, from the cohorts in Washington and New York, might become invidious—you can do this sort of thing with authors and pan them from here to Halifax if you've a mind to, but newspapermen are touchy. Still, I stick to my vote. Scarcely another of the commentators could stand up as well as Mr. Broun under that most acid and unkind (for the writer of the daily stint) of tests, a collection of newspaper pieces into a volume.

He may have sweated and cussed and scratched his head and slammed in the final sentence one jump ahead of the copy-boy's reaching hand, but this ten-year assortment of 106 columns—"It Seems to Me" (Harcourt Brace, $2.50)—makes sound, invigorating, and constantly eye-opening reading nevertheless.

• • • •

TO BE sure, I propose to withhold an absolutely clean bill of health. When Mr. Broun writes of the neighbor's cats or of the death of a little old flower vendor in Peoria, or when he composes one of his whimsical allegories, I'm looking out of the window. But that is because I'd be admiring the view if anyone short of Shakespeare should indulge in the same. A matter, you see, of personal stomach.

But when the Broun blood boils high, and he rolls up his sleeves and wades in, then it seems to me that most of us are glad to stand behind him ready with the second brick. The Broun enemies may number one legion, but the Broun allies number two. Thumping former Mayor Walker because he said he was "more or less shocked by the reports of the framing of innocent women," or Hoover and Coolidge because they walked so eloquodaintily around the grave of Harding, or the American Red Cross for refusing to aid the starving children of striking coal miners (its reason: the charter confined its relief to disasters caused by "acts of God"—under which heading, therefore, I dare say the World War and the Turkish extermination of the Armenians must come)—when, as I say, Mr. Broun comes growling forth on these topics and the Sacco-Vanzetti case and tenements in New York and Mr. McAdoo at the Democratic Convention, you know just where he stands. More, for more is due him, you know what he'll fight. All honest men will grant that he is the bruin that fights like a man.

And from this taste for action, as in few other columnists, we learn very accurately the core which distinguishes him. We come to know him, not as a pulpit or a rostrum or a soap-box of some general credo, but as a person.

And that is the secret of writing a good column.

• • • •

YOU could hardly find a newspaperman in the country who doesn't admire the Broun technique, and envy it. Take the sharpness of his first sentences alone. Of the Ku Klux floggings in Florida he begins, "They ought to land the marines in Florida." When he writes "The Piece That Got Me Fired," he begins, "There ought to be a place in New York City for a liberal newspaper." When he composes a masterly obituary on Debs, he strikes from the shoulder: "Eugene V. Debs is dead and everybody says that he was a good man. He was no better and no worse when he served a sentence at Atlanta."

Mr. Broun can write an obituary that ought to be printed on linen-rag paper with Garamond type. He can have more fun with a stuffed shirt than a colony of termites. He can fill almost anything he touches with that summum bonum—what I call the texture of constant interest. All this newspapermen know and strive for.

But then we come to something sad. In a country of 1,929 English-language daily newspapers and Lord knows how many public tappers of the typewriter, to come out flat-footed and loud-voiced and slugging with right and left at some social, political, or moral excrescence on the face of the earth is so very distinguishable an act that it is known in the trade as a "fine Brounian frenzy."

My profound compliments to you, Heywood, and will you join me in a loud "faugh?"

The Once Over

Bulletins on a Burlesque Strike.

New York, Sept. 11.—Further disorders in the burlesque belt broke out here today. Burlesque comedians who had walked out in sympathy clashed with theater operators and in a five-hour battle nobody was hurt. This was regarded as most unfortunate.

• • • •

The theater district was thrown into a panic today by a report that Yvette Rubinoff ("Dolores Conchita") had found a large bomb in her dressing room. The report was later prove unfounded. "I didn't say I found a large bomb in my dressing room," explained Yvette, "I said big bum."

Flash—The Governor has been asked to intervene in the strike in the burlesque field.

"I want the naked truth," demanded the Governor when asked to intervene.

"The chorus girls say they are the victims of economic inequalities," declared a spokesman.

"It's a lie," shouted one of the girls. "We don't use that kind of language, even in fun."

• • • •

The Governor was pretty hot over a typographical error in one of the newspapers. The Governor had said that he might agree to stop in and the printer made it "step-ins."

Later—More trouble broke out in the burlesque strike this afternoon. A vender of art magazines between the acts swung at the fellow who sells the candy with a prize in every package. The latter returned the swing. As both punches landed the police were satisfied.

• • • •

Flash—President Roosevelt has been petitioned to take a hand in the burlesque disorders.

"We demand the broader life!" was today adopted as the chorus girls' slogan.

"What's become of this Nude Deal, anyhow?" demanded Tillie Sladvacz ("Genevieve Barrymore").

It is understood the President will name a commission composed of two Harvard professors and one Yale man to investigate conditions in the burlesque field.

The following telegram was received from Washington by Strippers Union, No. 8, today.

"Humanity is on your side. You are entitled to food and clothing."

The union replied promptly as follows:

"Who said anything about clothing?"

Threat to Empire

If The League Fails To Solve Riddle Of Italy And Ethiopia, Observer Feels That The Walls Of European Security May Fall.

By David Wills.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

ON Sunday, the 18th of August, Mussolini torpedoed the three-power conference in Paris. England and France had offered, provided that Abyssinia was willing, and the whole thing was done under League blessing, to obtain substantial economic concessions for Italy in Abyssinia. But Mussolini rejected all compromise, refused all explanation.

Four days later, on August 22, the British cabinet decided to stand by the League, but postponed lifting the embargo on arms shipments to Abyssinia. This last decision seemed to weaken the force of the first, but it was rumored that the embargo could not be lifted until there was sufficient fleet in the Mediterranean to prevent interference by Mussolini. Since then there have been movements of British warships and troops to Malta.

As Sir Samuel Hoare's speech to the League assembly now shows, the cabinet did definitely decide to support the League, even unto sanctions. For this unexpectedly firm stand Mussolini's anti-British press campaign must take most of the credit. The imperialist members of the British cabinet began to fear that Mussolini would not stop at conquest of Abyssinia, but would afterward challenge Britain's control of the Mediterranean, demand at least equal rights with Great Britain over the Suez Canal, even try for Egypt or the Sudan to link up Italian colonies in north Africa with those in the East. The imperialists decided they would rather forestall such attacks on the empire by disciplinary action now under League auspices, with the world's blessing.

The British press has been conducting a verbal warfare for several weeks, and the campaign increases in vehemence, as the fatal day and the zero hour approach. Northcliffe, in the Daily Mail and the Evening News: "Respect Mussolini; make friends with Germany; Rearm!" The Daily Express and the Evening Standard mouth Beaverbrook's doctrines: Keep Out! Isolate! Rearm! The Morning Post, organ of the imperialists, the right-wing conservatives, is up in arms at Mussolini's threat to the empire, demands a bigger navy and a firm hand with Italy.

The Daily Herald (labor) the New Chronicle and the Star (independent liberal) and the Manchester Guardian (advance liberal) support the League to the uttermost, for if Mussolini is left unchecked the League is destroyed, and international anarchy returns. Even the Times (government) and the Daily Telegraph (conservative) have plucked up their courage since the cabinet meeting, and have come out for support of the League.

The French cabinet has appointed a strong delegation to Geneva, "with a free hand to support the League." Exactly what that means is not clear, but it is reported that M. Herriot addressed the cabinet for over an hour; made out an unanswerable case for full and unqualified support of the League, threatened to resign if the cabinet evaded the issue. His resignation would mean the end of the government and of Laval; it is reported that the cabinet found his arguments convincing.

Meanwhile, the French press has been as varied as the English in its opinions. The Petit Parisian wants to keep both Italian and British friendship, advocates no rigid position at Geneva. The liberal Republique supports "collective sanctions" in the last resort, for France may need them one day herself against Germany; collective sanctions are the most effective guarantee of French security, and if Britain will support them, France should be prepared to risk the loss of Italy's friendship. The Populaire, Socialist, is equally strong for Geneva for once war has broken out and the League collapsed, nothing can prevent the war from spreading in all directions.

And so the principal powers are lined up at Geneva. Behind them the Scandinavian countries, and perhaps the Little Entente, declare for the League—but must await a determined lead. Germany's notice of withdrawal from the League has not yet expired; and so far her conduct has been strictly noncommittal and correct. Even on the most cold-blooded and strictly Machiavellian calculation, Germany is not likely to support Italy at present. She is not ready for war, even if she wants it, and with very severe troubles brewing at home, her game is to lie low and wait. Poland has given little indication of her attitude; she must wait to see which way the German cat jumps.

If neither the Council nor the Assembly of the League can do anything to solve the Italo-Ethiopian riddle, the League will die and with it will die the British Empire, French security, and even the permanence of Italy's ill-gotten gains. For the British Empire can be maintained only through an international organization which will guarantee peace, while it permits access to the resources of the empire to all peoples. If Britain shirks the present issue, and the news gets around that Britain is on the run, those who have designs on the empire will conspire together, and against simultaneous attack from Japan in the East, Italy in the Mediterranean, and Germany in Europe, the empire must collapse. For Britain, if she sees the truth, the League and the empire are one.

Similarly France can only be secure against future attachk if she has the support of the League. If she destroys the League she destroys herself. For Britain will most certainly withdraw from continental affairs and strive for security behind a wall of armament. Locarno will be dead; Germany will have a free hand, and revenge is a powerful motive.

A New Product Gives Lasting Sheen to Hair

Cream Is Put Out by House Known for Its Reliability.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IF THERE WERE some convenient Aladdin in our lives, always ready with a magic lamp to grant our slightest wish, one of the first requests we would make would be for the gift of curly hair. Since we are one of those unfortunates who forever struggle with straight and straggling locks in an effort to find the secret of an attractive coiffure, this gift would mean more to us than almost anything else we can think of.

If you, too, are a fellow sufferer, continually fussing with your hair and afraid that it never looks quite right, you will be glad to know that at last an Aladdin has appeared upon the scene who can give you the secret of the lustrous hair which is so essential to a well-groomed appearance. He comes, not in genie form, but in the shape of a little jar of cream, put out by a house known for its reliability and the excellence of its products.

This magic formula will solve the problem of what to do with hair which loses its wave almost immediately after a visit to the beauty shop. No matter how good the wave, it never looks quite as well a few days after being set. But with this preparation, you can restore all the hairdresser's art to your coiffure. Just a tiny application, about the amount that would cover a dime, is sufficient to press the waves into place.

Or you can even use it immediately after a shampoo, to give yourself a new fingerwave. The results will be the same. It is soft and manageable, leaving no stiffness or powdery residue. Dry, split ends will disappear. Its luster-imparting qualities will completely do away with dullness and harshness, leaving in their place a lasting sheen that is equal to the gloss of your hair when it is healthy. It costs only 75 cents a jar.

Sweaters for Men.

LADIES! If you want to make a hit with your husbands, take them down to an F street store and show them their grand collection of sweaters, which are just the thing for these rapidly approaching fall and winter days.

The discriminating man who is continually searching for sweaters which have that expensive handmade look, and yet which manage to remain in the lower price brackets, will find what he seeks in the stunning slipover featured by this same store. It comes in a very attractive style with a fine white stripe forming a medium-size check pattern. Made of the finest rabbit's hair wool, closely resembling imported English materials, it costs only $2.95.

Another type comes in a cardigan model, also made of rabbit's hair wool. Leather buttons and bands of braid around the pockets add a smart touch to this sweater. It comes in all color combinations, and costs $3.95.

Matching Shoes and Handbags.

SHOES AND HANDBAGS to match! So goes the formula for fall and winter chic this season. Women who wish to be smart will be interested in the collection to be found in a downtown department store of matching sandals and handbags. The material is a deep, soft suede, in luscious colors of "Araby green" and "Persian wine red." They come in a number of smart styles, inspired by Parisian designers. The sandals are T-strap, a model which is extremely flattering to the feet. The price is far more reasonable than one would expect from such quality. The shoes are $4 and the bags $3.

Complexion Aids.

A LOCAL STORE has this month some grand complexion brushes and an extra special skin soap which come in a box priced at $2.50. The brush is made of special bristles which will stimulate your skin and give it that priceless glow of youth without irritating it. It has a satinwood back which is absolutely guaranteed not to crack or peel. The soap contains a cold-cream mixture which cleanses and nourishes, and is non-alkaline, hence will not dry out the skin.

FAVORITE FOODS of FAMOUS FOLK

Deviled Crab Ranks High Among Dishes Served by D. A. R. Head.

By Pattie Ellicott.

MRS. WILLIAM A. BECKER.

MODERN WOMEN when they become prominent in club life or civic movements do not abandon their interest in homemaking. This is true of Mrs. William A. Becker, president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, whose devotion to her home and interest in domestic science is a proverb among her friends.

Persons who have been entertained in Mrs. Becker's spacious home in Summit, N. J., recall with pleasure the appetite-provoking meals, which, although prepared by the cook of the mansion, have had the personal supervision of the busy president general behind them.

A new experience is now before Mrs. Becker. In her widespread travels for the D. A. R., which will cover virtually the whole country in the course of her three-year term, she will be feted with the native dishes of the particular region in which she happens to be at the time.

A former president general of the D. A. R. noted for her wit as well as for the outstanding ability once laughingly remarked: "No matter how much she may have cared for it before election no 'P. G.' goes out of office still liking chicen a la king." This reference was to the fact that at so many official luncheons a D. A. R. leader must attend, chicken a la king is so often the piece de resistance.

Among Mrs. Becker's favorite dishes are crabs in almost every form. She is very found of sea food and it appears frequently on her table at Summit. High in the rank of crab dishes for Mrs. Becker is the deviled crab, a delicacy which is a decided favorite in her eyes.

Green Make-up Is Among Fall Style Decrees

THE color green predominant in fall clothes, also will enter the realm of fall make-up. Green eyeshading and mascara will be used in women's facial make-up this fall and winter, it was announced at a recent meeting of the perfume and cosmetic buyers in New York. Cosmeticians believe the use of the color green in facial make-up will add glamour to women and also contribute to their elegance. The green eyeshading may even have a sprinkle of gold or silver "star dust" on it, to carry out the Renaissance effect in style.

The green make-up will come in three shades and will be used chiefly with black or black and green ensembles.

The cosmeticians also announced there would be at least 5 different make-ups for red-headed women and a general accent on color in lipsticks and nail polishes.

Cosmetics for men also will be in wider use this winter. One manufacturer is launching a liquid face powder in seven colors, one of which it is said will enable men to achieve the tanned look without recourse to sunshine or grease paint.

Oleomargarine Revenue Gains 89 Per Cent in 1935

By the Associated Press.

Tax figures made public this week indicated the housewife relied more on butter substitutes last year to help balance her kitchen budget.

There was an 89 per cent jump in internal revenue collections on colored oleomargarine during the 1935 fiscal year compared with 1934; a 49 per cent increase in tax receipts on uncolored oleomargarine, and a 48 per cent increase in those on process or renovated butter.

This Souffle Will Satisfy Meat Devotee

Dried Beef Bits Flavor Dish for One Who Rejects Meatless Meal.

By Dorothea Duncan.

JUST the flavor of meat will be enough to satisfy many persons who reject an entirely meatless dinner. You will find that a small amount of money spent on a little bit of meat is a convenient way to keep the budget balanced and at the same time please the members of your family who can't be completely happy unless meat makes its appearance at least once during the course of the day.

The menus suggested for today find their source of protein in eggs, milk and cheese rather than in any one generous portion of meat, but the souffle suggested for the dinner menu has a few ounces of dried beef added to give it character for those who prefer the flavor of meat in the heaviest meal of the day.

A bit of chopped left-over baked or boiled ham or a small portion of boiled ham purchased especially for the souffle can be substituted in place of the dried beef.

Following is an excellent recipe for souffle. It has the qualities of puffiness and firmness that are so essential to this particular dish.

Souffle.

3 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca, 1 cup milk
1 cup dried beef (broken into small pieces)
3 egg yolks, beaten until thick and lemon colored
3 egg whites, stiffly beaten.

Combine tapioca and milk in top of double boiler. Place over rapidly boiling water, bring to scalding point (allow 3 to 5 minutes), and cook 5 minutes, stirring frequently. Add dried beef and stir into mixture. Remove from boiling water; cool slightly. Add egg yolks and mix well. Fold in egg whites. Turn into greased baking dish. Place in a pan of hot water; bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 50 minutes or until firm. Serves six.

The salt of the dried beef makes it necessary to add only a few grains of salt, if any, to the mixture.

Nursery Schools Hailed For Benefits to Child

MRS. MORDECAI EZEKIEL, Bachrach Photo.

Mrs. Mordecai Ezekiel, FERA Specialist, Cites Training in Good Habits, Proper Diet and Development of Personality.

By Dudley Harmon.

HOW DOES your young child occupy himself when you are not there to supervise? Does he play quietly by himself or with other children, or does he gleefully consume the jar of raspberry jam which you thought you had safely tucked away on the top shelf.

Nine times out of ten his activities are of the jam-stealing variety, according to Mrs. Mordecai Ezekial, supervisor of the FERA nursery schools, divisions 1 to 9, in the District, and member of the executive board of the National Child Research Center, organization for the study and development of children.

After ten years spent in study and practical experience with children's problems, Mrs. Ezekiel is convinced that modern homes, where the situation requires that the young children be left frequently alone, are not such as to give the child of pre-kindergarten age the moral, mental and physical benefits to be obtained at the nursery school.

Taking Place of Home Training.

The nursery school, according to Mrs. Ezekiel, is rapidly taking the place of the training which children used to receive at home. The average parent today, she feels, is not equipped to give the child the benefits he deserves because of an increased appreciation of his importance of his early years. In the first place, Mrs. Ezekiel said, homes are smaller than they used to be, and there is not the same space inside or out for children to romp and play. Secondly, families are not so large as formerly, which has resulted in a decrease in companionship for the child. Then, too, mothers are spending more and more time outside the home, either working or engaged in social or community activities, leaving the child alone or in the care of servants.

"A child's early years are in many ways the most important period of his life," Mrs. Ezekiel said, "and they should not be dealt with in any such haphazard fashion. In the nursery school, we endeavor to see that he forms good habits, both physical and behavioristic. By supervising his diet, we train him to like the right kinds of foods, and by planning his play, we see to it that he learns to get along with others.

"The child's happiness is dependent on his ability to get along with others. If he is painfully shy, or has quirks which hinder popularity, the early years are the time to discover and remedy such conditions. Getting along with people is to a large extent a matter of habit. The sooner this habit is formed, the better.

Discipline by Reason.

"When a shy boy or girl enters our school, we try first to discover his interests. If a little girl likes dolls, we let her play quietly with them until she becomes used to the presence of other children. Gradually, for it is usually only a matter of time, and without any forcing on our part, she gets accustomed to the others and begins to join in their activities."

The discipline of children, Mrs. Ezekiel believes, should be based on an appeal to their reason rather than on mere physical chastisement.

"If big Jimmy takes little Johnny's tricycle away from him," she continued, "we explain to him that this is not a friendly act and that he must await his turn. Then we see to it that he gets a ride on the tricycle.

"The nursery school has other useful features besides its training in behavior. It instructs the child in many subjects, awakening him to a consciousness of the world outside. Teachers can often give him lessons about nature, for example, that a mother is too busy to bother with. If a nursery school child meets with an angle worm, for instance, he is told how to handle it and a bit about its functions, instead of being left to tear the worm to pieces or scream with fright."

Health Chief Problem.

In speaking of the FERA nursery schools, Mrs. Ezekiel was most emphatic in describing the benefits received by the children of those on relief.

"Our problems in these schools," she said, "are chiefly those of health. Many of these children are in a bad physical condition when they come to us. By putting them under the care of our doctors and nurses, however, we are able to build them up so well that when they enter the first grade they are often better off from a physical standpoint than the child from a more prosperous home."

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I have greatly admired your sound judgment and unusually keen understanding. So much so, in fact, that I am coming to you for advice. If I am at fault I will take it on the chin and thank you sincerely for telling me so.

My husband and I have only recently moved to Washington and indeed feel privileged to live in this beautiful city. We have a modest little home, and, being childless, are devoted to each other. I neglected to say we have been married for ten years and have never known an unhappy day.

Before I married, I was engaged to a man whom I dearly loved. At least, I thought I loved him until I met the man who later became my husband. Then I went to the first man and asked to be released from the engagement. He was most kind and understanding, only asking me to make sure which man I really loved. My regard for him had always been tremendous, but his unselfish kindness at that time endeared him to me the more. In fact, I still treasure that occasion as one of my loveliest memories.

* * * *

However, I did not see him again for seven years, when I met him by accident. Naturally it was pleasant to see him and during our talk, I said as much. Two days later he telephoned, asking me to tea. I refused in friendly fashion, although wanting very much to accept. However, persistent calls and repeated invitations won me over, and twice I had tea with him. The first time, he told me he still loved me and always would. He said he was letting his wife (he married five years after I did) divorce him. The second time, he asked me to marry him. Now, while this man still possesses his old charm for me, I am by no means in love with him. So I refused to see him again.

* * * *

Of course, I told him I loved my husband and wouldn't think of leaving him; that our life together was ideal and that I wanted nothing more. Still he would not believe me. This sort of thing went on for months. Then my husband was called to Washington. Naturally, I supposed our removal here would end the situation.

* * * *

Three weeks ago I answered the telephone, to hear this man's voice. I would not be truthful if I said I was not thrilled. Since then I have seen him twice in public places and have spoken with him by telephone several times, doing so only in an attempt to bring him to a sensible understanding. I am still very fond of him. He, however, contends I am really in love with him and that I remain with my husband only from a sense of duty. That is ridiculous. The very thought of leaving my husband, our home and the lovely life we have made for ourselves endears these things to me the more. And although I still care for this other man, I haven't told him so, nor have I revealed it by my actions. But I must say the old appeal is there, surprising as it is to me.

* * * *

He has pleaded with me to obtain my freedom. This I would not think of doing. But he has set a given time for me to tell my husband, or he will. Now, I could tell my husband and he would understand, I am sure. But our life together has been so lovely and flawless that I dislike discord.

* * * *

Perhaps unknowingly I have encouraged this man. Although I have not spoken an endearing word to him, I somehow feel at fault in not making him understand that I really love my husband and our happy life together. This man has an unlimited amount of money and time means nothing to him. His remaining here is causing me a great deal of worry and unhappiness. Just where have I failed, and what can I do? G. E. M.

Advice to Coquette.

DEAR G. E. M.: I suppose the reason this man believes you care for him more than you do for your husband is because you have conspired with him, in a measure, to deceive your husband. Over a period of three years you have been meeting him and talking with him more or less surreptitiously. You have listened even though you have not responded to his pleadings and his protestations of love. You have, so you say, felt his charm, sensed his appeal, thrilled to his voice. But dutifully you have denied to him the existence of any such disturbance in your breast. Your eyes and your actions have probably told a far different story; and the man has probably misinterpreted what he saw.

I haven't the slightest doubt but that you do love your husband as much as you say—at least to the fullest extent of which you are capable. But it is obvious that fact hasn't prevented your getting a great deal of pleasurable excitement and satisfaction out of this protracted flirtation with your old beau. For flirtation it undeniably has been.

After the first tea date, had you sincerely wished to obviate further dalliance of the same sort you could have achieved that end by taking straightforward action. You could have admitted his undeniable if superficial attractiveness and made that the basis of a definitely worded and strictly-adhered-to determination not see him again. If he persisted, you could have told your husband what had been done and said, and asked his help in routing the romantic interloper.

* * * *

Where you have failed is in tacitly deceiving your husband. You know this, and it is a troubled conscience, plus fear of losing your husband's implicit confidence and devotion when and if he learns the truth of the affair, which is now causing you worry and unhappiness.

You have been playing with fire, thinking you couldn't get burned because you seemed so well insulated by happy marriage. But now the fire threatens to get out of control by virtue of this man's insistence that your husband know of what has transpired, you want, for the first time, to be done with the whole thing.

* * * *

What can you do? It seems to me the only preservative measure left to you is to tell your husband all that has happened, before some one else tells him. You say he will understand, but you don't seem entirely sure, for in the next sentence you add, "—but life together has been so lovely and flawless that I dislike discord."

Since you have admitted, if not invited, into your lovely and flawless life those factors which cause discord, I believe you'll just have to bear with the consequences. If you manage to get out of this mess with your marriage intact, you'll be a rather lucky woman, and if your husband can and will understand, he's a very exceptional man, who deserves something better than a fool for a wife. Fall Neckwear Matches Costumes

Dressier Collars Will Be of Stain, Lame and Even Metal Kid.

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—Fashion-knowers will wear many types of neckwear this fall—to match the different types of dresses they're wearing! Young and boyish collars for young and boyish dresses—rich lame and velvet collars for Renaissance-inspired dresses—collars with a crisp, military flair to them for military looking dresses—and so on.

Matching collar and belt sets will be worn, too, by her who likes the ensemble idea. The lady at the upper left of the illustration has chosen a chiffon velvet set, in a rich Renaissance purple shade. The collar can either be worn as sketched, or have the ends tucked neatly inside the dress. A right smart fashion either way!

Sketched at the lower right is a silk crepe scarf and belt set in rich colors. When motoring in an open car, or walking hatless on a windy day, the lady may slip off the scarf, and twist it around her head like a bandanna! A new and practical idea!

Military enough to merit a salute is the stitched satin gilet sketched, with the upstanding collar and neat little bows. Here's the perfect neckpiece for those military looking dresses . . . and there are plenty of them this fall

Fashion uses satin, lame, even metal kid, for some of the dressier collars. That's a rose lame one sketched at the upper right . . . fit to top her richest looking Renaissance-inspired costume!

Net neckwear will be worn, too. There's a softness about it that appeals to many women. Greta Garbo wears a rippling jabot of frilly net in her new picture—a fashion that many will adopt!

Saturday—Lounging robes and pajamas adopt trimly tailored lines.

Cost of Living in U. S. Rises ½% in August

The national cost of living went up 0.5 per cent in August, a study by the National Industrial Conference Board revealed yesterday.

The study ascribed the increase to rises of 0.5 per cent in prices of food over July, 1.4 per cent in rents, and 0.5 per cent in coal. Clothing prices declined 0.3 per cent during the month.

These national trends, following a three months' decline in living costs, matched local findings of The Post published yesterday.

2 Mentioned For Job Held By Ghingher

Goodenow, Anders on List Submitted Earlier to Nice.

No Immediate Action Due on Successor to Bank Official.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 11.—Financial and political circles buzzed today with speculation as to the successor of John J. Ghingher, State bank commissioner, whose resignation becomes effective Monday.

Ghingher has been elected president of the National Central Bank, an old-established Baltimore institution. John Hostelhorn, deputy in Ghingher's office, is to be acting commissioner until a successor is selected.

The retiring official delivered his resignation today to Gov. Harry W. Nice in person. It was accepted with regret, the Governor said.

Term Ended on May 6.

Ghingher's term of office ended May 6 and announcement of his replacement has been expected since. The Governor's advisory committee several weeks ago recommended a list of three persons, one of them to be selected for the office.

Ghingher's name was on the list. Others were Rufus K. Goodenow, jr., vice president of the Maryland Trust Co., and W. H. B. Anders, president of a Libertyville bank and cashier of another at Union Bridge.

After receiving this list, the Governor said he would make no immediate appointment. Asked then if he would choose one of the names on the list, he said:

Inclined to Favor List.

"I will follow the recommendation of the committee, but this does not necessarily mean I will appoint someone from this list."

It was learned from sources close to the Governor today that he is more strongly inclined to the specific list submitted by the committee, but he has not definitely indicated he will appoint Koodenow or Anders.

Irving Adams, former president of the Colonial Trust Co., and State Senator J. David Baile (Republican), of Carroll, have also been mentioned as possible appointees.

Project's Veto Stirs Officials Of Winchester

City Manager Demands Review of $532,000 PWA Request.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Sept. 11.—Sharply critical because of the disapproval of an application for a PWA grant with which to develop a $532,000 water supply, city officials under the lead of City Manager Arthur M. Field pressed today for a review of the request for funds which, they say, "would solve the local relief problem for some time to come."

Field rapped the officials who turned down the application because of an alleged lack of skilled labor on relief, declaring that they took advantage of a technicality to wreck "the most worth-while relief project the community could have.

"It is perfectly ridiculous," he said, "that a half-million-dollar project should be thrown into the discard because of $9,000 which would have been spent for skilled laborers not on the relief roll."

"The most ridiculous phase of all," he continued, "is that the Government has urged by telegram and letter that PWA projects be prepared. Only last Saturday a representative of the PWA was in Winchester urging us to put in more projects in every possible way. While this was in progress, the one big project prepared by the city at considerable cost was being turned down for a trivial reason."

An appeal was sent forward to Col. A. J. Anderson, State administrator, asking aid in obtaining the review.

Statement on Channels for Loans to Be Posted in Anne Arundel.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 11.—Federal agencies in a position to extend financial aid to meet property tax payments, where warranted, will be brought to the attention of Anne Arundel countians as a result of a conference today between Federal and county officials on property now advertised for sale.

Arthur E. Hungerford, State director for the National Emergency Council for Maryland, will send statements to county postoffices and general stores listing the agencies. They are the Federal Land Bank or Land Bank Commissioner, Production Credit Corporation, Farm Debt Adjustment County Credit Council and the Federal Housing Administration.

J. Thomas Vandenburg, of the Production Credit Corporation; M. L. Gulden, chief of tax division, Federal Land Bank, and John F. Joesting, field representative of the farm debt adjustment, outlined the scope of their organizations to the county officials. They pointed out that loans could be arranged when property warranted, but that in no sense would the Federal Government make a gift or be a "Santa Claus" in advancing funds.

Hungerford arranged the meeting several weeks ago when 3,506 pieces of Anne Arundel property were advertised for sale for tax delinquencies from 1934 and prior years.

C. Albert Hodges, former treasurer, who is handling the tax sale, estimated that about 1,000 pieces of property of all types will be left when the sale takes place October 14. He said about 1,000 taxpayers had liquidated their indebtedness and that payments are being made at the rate of from 30 to 40 daily. Today 70 delinquents paid and Monday and yesterday $15,000 in delinquent taxes was collected.

'Shocked' Court Orders Inquiry In Bank's Loans

Sobeloff Named to Probe Into Borrowings From Baltimore Trust.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 11.—Declaring himself "shocked" at revelations of loan losses of the old Baltimore Trust Co., Judge Eugene O'Dunne today named a special investigator to determine whether efforts should be made to enforce either criminal or civil liability against officers and directors of the institution.

The judge named Simon E. Sobeloff as a special officer of the court to investigate approximately $4,000,000 in loans and the circumstances surrounding them, instructing him to report privately to Deputy State Bank Commissioner John D. Hospelhorn, and to the three receivership counsels—Joseph C. France, Alexander Armstrong and J. Purdon Wright. The judge declared it would then be up to the receiver to take such action as the receivership counsel might advise after receiving the report.

Stating that his only hesitancy was concerning the expenditure of any further funds in view of the costliness of receivership proceedings, Judge O'Dunne added that he was convinced that the result would warrant the limited expenditures which he would authorize, even if such result were merely to create and restore public confidence. He reserved the right to terminate the investigation if he saw fit. Meanwhile, he ordered the hearing on the statutory liability of the bank stockholders, during which the new questions had arisen, to be resumed Monday. The hearing began last Monday.

Judge O'Dunne's statement that he was "shocked" at the loan disclosures was made in his comments upon testimony given by Henry Thomas, president of the Baltimore Trust Corporation, liquidating concern for the old trust company.

Oyster Season Promises Jobs To 10,000 Men

Shellfish Arriving at Crisfield; Scarcity Is Reported.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Crisfield, Md., Sept. 11.—With first oyster shipments of the season leaving this Chesapeake Bay port, lower temperatures and the fattening of the shellfish give promise of the annual re-employment of 10,000 waterfront men throughout Maryland.

Although waters in the area will not be open to tongers until September 15, oystermen have been bringing oysters to local packing houses here by boat. Capt. Lloyd Parks, of Cambridge, was first to dock here with a load of oysters from Dorchester County waters and Capt. H. Drewer, of Saxis, Va., was first to bring a shipment from Virginia waters.

Since the opening of the month, egrly tongers have been permitted by conservation laws to "harvest" the rocks of Dorchester, Kent, Queen Annes and Talbot counties. Other Maryland counties throw open their waters next week.

According to the oystermen making a preseason inspection in this vicinity, serious scarcity has been noticed. Despite the shortage, they point out that the oysters are of a good quality and that the shortage may be compensated by higher prices.

Crisfield, called the "Oyster Capital of the United States," has more than 40 packing houses along its waterfront. Of these, only half are operating until the dredging season opens November 15.

Nice Moves To Restrain State Police

Seeks to Avoid Clash With Activities of Local Officers.

Written Request From County Authorities to Be Required.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 11.—Maryland State policemen, in the future, will only act in criminal cases when they are requested in writing by county authorities, Gov. Harry W. Nice said today.

In case of emergency, the Governor said, men may be sent to a county on verbal requests. Even when there, however, they will not function until their commander has received a written request for aid. Such requests must be made by the sheriff, State's attorney, or judge of the county.

"The State police are not trying to assume any function of any county police force," Gov. Nice said. "They will be an auxiliary force, and discretion as to their use will be left to the county authorities." He added that they will continue to act in cases of motor vehicle violations on their own initiative.

The new order was seen as the outcome of recent dissatisfaction on the Eastern Shore because a prisoner was brought to Baltimore. Local authorities claimed that there was no prospect of mob violence, and the removal was unnecessary. State police authorities, however, pointed out that the commitment of the prisoner to the Baltimore jail was signed by the local sheriff.

Mrs. Nice Inspects Mansion, But Only as a Housewife

By a Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 11.—Mrs. Harry W. Nice, who prefers to be known as Mrs. Nice rather than the "First Lady of Maryland," quietly made an informal visit to the executive mansion today in the role of housewife inspecting the renovation of her home.

Accompanied by Mrs. Dealey Nice, wife of the Governor's brother, and her son, Harry Nice, jr., Mrs. Nice drove her car from Baltimore for the first visit to Annapolis since a two weeks' vacation cruise on the State yacht Dupont.

Upon entering the mansion, which is being repaired to a condition befitting the dignity of Governors of Maryland, Mrs. Nice exclaimed:

"Oh, this is such an improvement over the old building."

With James A. Amos and Walter Ballard, of the construction company as guides, Mrs. Nice inspected the red brick building with its Colonial architecture from top to bottom.

"I was down in Virginia and visited Gov. Peery; he has a perfectly lovely mansion, but he has no third floor," she said peering excitedly about the third floor.

Blueprints were produced, which Mrs. Nice examined closely.

Tries His Magic On Links With Varying Results.

By Paul Gallico.
A Staff Correspondent.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 11.—This amateur thaumaturgist is pursuing his investigation of black magic and its effect on golfers here at the National Amateur championships. It is a fascinating study and sometimes you can get some very good results. By a combination of crossed fingers and the evil eye, I managed to bring Maurice McCarthy, jr., into the ninth hole 4 up over a chap named McCallum. I found McCallum an excellent subject for long-distance work. McCarthy won, 6 and 5, and I must hurry through with this piece and go on out and operate on his next opponent.

You will recall that yesterday I had some difficulty subduing Mr. Mile Parco, from Buffalo, who was playing another of my favorites, young Charley Yates. Yates made the turn 4 down, I think, and lost the tenth, too. At this point I gave up, for fear that I was jinxing Yates. But the news was brought to me in the press tent that Yates then won seven straight holes and the match. It was simply that the magic apparently was delayed. It caught up with him on the back nine.

The trouble is that you have to be present to start the spell, and I simply can't be all over the golf course at once. Thus, Sandy Somerville, of whom I am very fond and admire, was eliminated by a party named Walter Emory before I could get over and try the Gypsy curse. A messenger came panting out to the fourteenth hole, which is way out from the course, crying, "Come quickly, Sandy is slipping." When I got there it was too late. My man was out. Out of pure pique, I went around for half an hour, jinxing perfect strangers. I don't even know their names. That's what comes of course, of having power. You get mad and go around just working mischief. I think I fixed George Voigt's opponent in the morning round.

THERE is a wide divergence of opinion here on the proper application of black magic. An official of the U. S. G. A. wanted to know whether I was using the Southern or the Northern evil eye. I was ashamed to have to admit that I was just a youngster at the business, and didn't know the difference, but that I hoped to learn. He then told me that for the Southern Evil Eye you wear a bag of assafoetida around your neck. It helps to pucker up your eyelids. The Northern Evil is just plain.

Mr. Ralph McGill, of the Atlanta Constitution, contributed two valuable hints on Afro-American magic. It seems that if you get a hair of the party, somehow, snatch it from his scalp as he lies slumbering, or steal it from his brush or comb, it gives one power over that party, and I suppose you could make him miss an 8-inch putt as pretty as you please.

Another quaint custom is to flich some piece of writing off the victim, and wear it around your neck in a little bag. This is supposed to be effective, though not quite as much so as the hair. About the best you can do with the piece of writing is to get a wide hook onto a drive. I haven't tried it yet.

From Mr. Maurice McCarthy senior—you remember the Old Flatbush professional — I requested something in the way of an Irish curse of which I understand there are many hundreds, and some very fine ones too.

Offhand he could think of nothing but an ancient one to disturb the rest of an enemy. You say—"May the curse of the crows awaken you." It works only if you live near a clump of trees. The crows come over and roost in the trees at 4:30 in the morning and start to raise hell. It's not much good if the guy is naturally an early riser.

STILL, the curse of the crows might be useful to bother a guy putting. I noticed on the eighth green today that some one had invoked the crickets against Lawson Little. Every time he bent over to putt, one of them would go off like a pantry buzzer, only twice as loud. I wasn't working on Little, so I just watched to see what would happen. The big Stanford kid had magic of his own. He waited until the cricket subsided and canned one for 15 feet. The boy has a very cheerful smile, which is most effective against any kind of a jinx. Those sour-pussed golfers make the best subjects.

The greatest difficulty is combining black magic with white. I had no difficulty in keeping putts out of holes or wishing iron shots into traps, but coaxing the ball down the hole is something else again. Young McCarthy, jr., missed three putts of less than 2 feet. He should have been 6 up going through the turn.

Well, you'll excuse me now. I've got to go and make a little image of Charley Yates' afternoon opponent and stick a pin through it. If I can get one of my men through to the championship on Saturday, I am going to organize this business properly and sell service. There's a great field in it in the golf world.

Cuban's Play Saves Game In 11th

Gets Unassisted Double Play on Line Drive, 2 On, None Out.

Scores Winning Run as Bridges Throws Wild in Duel With Linke.

By Shirley Povich.

THE Detroit Tigers quit Washington for other fields last night with some lasting impressions of Senor Roberto Estallella, the Nats' Cuban rookie—impressions of Estallella pounding out base hits, Estallella driving across Washington runs, Estallella turning in unassisted double-plays and Estallella scrambling around the bases with the winning run in the twelfth inning.

Senor Estallella had a large afternoon. He and three of the Tigers' four errors figured in every Washington run, as the Nats finally triumphed, 4 to 3, in an extra-inning pitching duel between Ed Linke and Tommy Bridges. The bowlegged little Cuban personally reprieved the Nats from defeat back in the eleventh inning when he engineered a breath-taking double-play that choked off the Tigers' winning run.

Gasp at Esty's Play.

The 3,000 in the park were still gasping at Esty's feat long after it had been achieved. With runners on second and none out in the eleventh, the Tigers appeared sure shots to score against Linke. Charley Gehringer was at bat, and crack! A vicious line drive steamed toward left field. Thud! And the half-pint third baseman had it in his glove after a 3-foot leap.

There was nothing of the rookie about Estallella after he made that one-handed story-book catch. In the same motion that he returned to terra firma he started his scramble back to third base, all his wits about him, and beat the fleet Pete Fox back to the bag for an unassisted double play that delivered Linke and the Nats from a perilous situation.

Tommy Bridges was doing tolerably well as long as he was pitching toward the plate, but when he started pitching to third base in the twelfth inning the Tigers lost the ball game. It was on Bridges' wild throw on a bunt that the winning run scored, ending the threat of approaching darkness to halt the game.

Estallella came up to the bat to plague the Tigers once more in the twelfth. With the Detroit outfield playing far back in deference to his slugging ability, he got a lucky single on a looper over second base. To second he went when Jake Powell drew a walk and then Red Kress was ordered to bunt. It was a poor bunt, directly at Bridges, who fielded the ball cleanly and threw to Owen at third base for a force play on Estallella, but his throw was wild.

When the ball tore through Owen's glove, Estallella picked himself out of the dirt at third, scrambled to his feet and dashed home to win the ball game while the ball was rolling into left field.

Ed Linke pitched a swell ball game to steer the Nats to their third victory over the Tigers in the four-game series, but in their most recent defeat the Tigers found balm when the Yankees up in New York lost to Cleveland, thus enabling Detroit to maintain its 7½-game lead.

Tigers Take 2-0 Lead.

Detroit outhit the Nats, 16 to 12, but with men on bases Linke was almost invincible. After the first inning, in which the Tigers gained a 2-0 lead when a wild throw by Estallella followed Gehringer's double, Linke permitted only a single run, despite the fact that the Tigers had men on bases in every inning, but the tenth.

The Nats reached Bridges for two hits in the third and tied the score after Myer singled and Stone was hit by a pitched ball. Travis drove into a double play to score one run and the tying run tallied when Owen muffed Estallella's grounder.

Again the Tigers contributed an error to put the Nats in a 3-2 lead in the seventh. With two out, Rogell fumbled Myer's grounder and he completed the circuit on a single by Travis and Estallella's line drive single to left.

The Tigers tied it at 3-3 in the seventh after Rogell beat out a bunt to the Cuban. Owen's single shoved Rogell to third and he scored while Bridges was hitting into a double play.

As the games wore into extra innings, both clubs threatened only mildly until the eleventh. Fox led off that inning with a single to center and Cochrane bunted safely toward Linke, who threw the ball over Kuhel's head to put runners on second and third with one out. That was the situation when Gehringer smashed the ball toward left, Estallella went up into the air, speared the drive with one hand and reached third ahead of Fox for the double play that saved the ball game.

Pirates Win Finale From Giants, 10-7

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 11.—The Pirates saved themselves from a complete rout at the hands of the pennant-seeking Giants today when they pounded out a 10-to-7 triumph over New York in the series final after losing the first three games.

The Bucs got the jump on Roy Parmelee, who hasn't finished a game in his last eight starts, and due to Paul Waner's lusty swatting piled up enough runs to stand off the Giants' late rallies. Guy Bush, who had outdone Parmelee by failing to finish nine successive starts, staggered through to the end, although touched for 16 hits.

Yanks Los After Allen Holds Foe to 1 Hit In 8 Innings.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—Johnny Allen was so startled when he got his first good lead in a pitchers' battle with Mel Harder that he "blew" a mile high in the ninth inning and the Indains scored five runs to defeat the Yankees, 5 to 4, in their final clash today.

For eight innings Allen pitched one-hit ball and he scored the only run in the first seven. Then the Yanks pelted relief flinger Walter Stewart for three hits to lead 4-0 going into the ninth.

Earl Averill started the winning drive with a home run; Joe Vosmik, Bill Knickerbocker and Roy Hughes hit singles and Ed Phillips hoisted a high one that went for a double and tied the score when Jesse Hill lost the ball in the sun. Ralph Winegardenr's pinch hit brought Phillips in with the winning run.

Manager Steve O'Neill and Bill Brenzel of the Indians were chased from the bench for pootesting Umpire Moriarty's decisions.

Little, 7 Under Par on 28 Holes, Overwhelms Young and Riegel

erville, 1931 champion, on the nineteenth hole, occasioned surprise. The all Oklahoman seems to be the hottest thing in this championship next to King Little. He canned a 30-foot putt this morning on the nineteenth hole to defeat the Canadian, and in this afternoon shot 14 holes in 4 under par, going out in 33, to blast out the Minnesota ace, bespectacled Pat Sawyer, 6 and 4.

You have to reckon with this Emery lad. He has the game, and is on his game, as attested by the fact that in four rounds he has been exactly 8 under par. Can you beat that for golf?

Another of those upsets sent Charlie Yates, pride and joy of O. B. Keeler, to the sidelines late this afternoon. Atlanta Charlie, who had two struggles to survive Monday's and Tuesday's play, did a good job in eliminating Ernie Pieper, of San ose, Calif., 3 and 1, this morning, but he was kicked out of the picture in the fourth at the hands of Johnny Nash, a fair-to-middling golfer from Canada, 3 and 2. The former Intercollegiate king, now Western champion, and Nash shot 35s to become even at the turn, but then the Canadian went to town and shot the next seven holes in two under par to put the skids on the youngster who won his college crown on this very course.

Among other favorites who met with defeat were Albert (Scotty) Campbell, the Seattle flash, twice Canadian champion; Gus Moreland, of Walker Cup fame; Rodney Bliss, jr., of Omaha; Dave Goldman, of Dallas, 1934 finalist; Maurice McCarthy, one time Intercollegiate champion, who was looked upon as the real hope of Cleveland, and Jack Westland of Chicago, member of the 1934 Walker Cup team.

Campbell Is Impressive.

Campbell's performance in his first two matches was impressive, but today he was eliminated by Held, 1 up, despite a 71. The Pacific Coast golfer lost because Held's eagle on the sixteenth was mightier than his birdie' 4, and the New Yorker's par 4 on the home hole, with the match even, was better than Campbell's 5. Held was hot, scoring a 70. He went out in the afternoon and put away Washington's Roger Peacock, 2 and 1, with an exhibition of uncanny putting.

To show you how funny golf is, Campbell has eight 3s and Held very few. Yet, Campbell couldn't win. Why, because Held got his 3s at the crucial moments—that eagle 3 the master stroke.

Moreland's crash was a heartbreaker. The Texas hurricane bowed to 21-year-old Johnny Wagner, of Chicago, on the nineteenth hole when the Windy City boy sank a 7-foot putt for a birdie 3. Gus couldn't match it. Wagner's stay was short lived, for Freddie Haas, the Louisiana State University star, who eliminated Ray Billows, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the "Cinderella Kid," 1 up on the nineteenth hole in the morning, snapped Moreland's conqueror, 3 and 2, with 1 over par performance.

Goldman Bows to Donovan.

Goldman bowed to Bud Donovan, of Winnipeg, Canada, 2 and 1, and Donovan in turn was bounced out by little Willie Turnesa by the same count.

After getting by his morning match comfortably, Maurice McCarthy had the scrap of his life with Kocsis before cracking up on the home hole. Gocsis won, 1 up. McCarthy, short of the eighteenth green with his approach, dubbed his third and took a 5, as the Michigan star, 15 feet from the pin after his second shot, hit the flag and won with a par 4. Kocsis scored a 34-38—72 and McCarthy a 35-38—73. It was a thriller.

Voigt's Showing Good.

Westland's shocking defeat came in the fourth round. The Chicagoan who bowed to Ouimet in the 1931 Amateur at Beverly Country Club was unsteady with his irons and putting, and lost to McCullough, 1 up. McCullough threw an even par 36 at Westland to take a 2-up lead, won one, lost two and halved six of the remaining nine holes.

Voigt's showing in his two victories today augurs well for his

Cards Defeat Phils Behind Paul Dean

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Sept. 11.—Paul Dean, wobbly in his preceding strat against Boston, pitched masterfully today against Philadelphia, and the world champion Cardinals maintained their National League leadership by winning, 10 to 2.

The younger Dean scattered seven Phillies hits, while his teammates blasted Orville Jorgens, who defeated the Cardinals three times this year, out of the game in the third inning.

Peacock Falls In 4th Round Of Amateur

Held Wins, 2 and 1, After Local Player Blows Early Lead.

By a Staff Correspondent.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 11.—After holding a 2-up lead through the seventh hole, Roger Peacock, 24-year-old Washington, D. C., golf star, lost his putting touch this afternoon and was eliminated by Eddie Held, veteran New York player, 2 and 1, in the fourth round of the national amateur championship.

Peacock won his morning battle from stocky Eddie Hogan, Portland, Oreg., ace, 2 and 1, breezing through the 17 holes in even par to put out the Pacific Coast golfer, who yesterday eliminated Johnny Fischer, of Walker Cup fame.

Whereas, as in his third round match, Peacock putted beautifully, holing two great ones on short holes for deuces, one a 25-footer, in his nightcap clash with Held, former national public links champion, the Indian Spring golfer had a bad putting break from two standpoints.

The Washington boy not only had to contend with a rebellious putter loaned him by Professional George Diffenbaugh shortly before he embarked for Cleveland, but also a red-hot putter which Eddie Held flung at him all afternoon.

Peacock sank only one decent putt—that on the fourth, where he made a brilliant shot from out of the rough over a strap guarding the green to within 10 feet of the pin. It was a birdie 3, and put him 1 up on the New Yorker. Peacock 3-putted two greens and missed short ones for losses on the twelfth and fourteenth, two vital holes in this thrilling match.

4 One-Putters.

On the other hand, there was Held, veteran of 13 National Amateur championships, putting like a magician. Held had four straight 1-putt greens starting with the second and six for the first nine. He swung his putter only 13 times for the outgoing side, while Peacock had 17 putts.

Held, out in 38, standing all even with Peacock, shot the next eight holes in one under par. Peacock went out in 37, one over, and was one over par for the remaining holes—two over for the day.

Peacock and Held halved the first three holes, the second in birdie 4s. Peacock's birdie 3 won him the fourth, and they halved the short fifth in 4s, after Peacock was trapped and Held overshot the green. Here Held sank a 6-footer for his half.

Roger 3-putted the sixth, as did Held, but Peacock won with a 5 to a 6, as

Don Guzman Wins by Length to Pay $15.80 at Narragansett

Victor Defeats Chatmoss in Last Dash

Lafayette Stake Pays Owner $2,275; Double High.

By the Associated Press.

NARRAGANSETT PARK, R. I., Sept. 11.—Mrs. M. C. Breen's 5-year-old Don Guzman, claimed last spring from Carlos W. Muller, vice president of Panama, accounted for the Lafayette Claiming Stakes, a mile and 1 furlong for 3-year-olds, feature race on today's card.

By his length-victory over Mrs. T. E. Proctor's Chatmoss, the gelded son of St. James, bred by George D. Widener, added $2,275 to his earnings, which now have reached $7,580 this year.

After a brief joust with Percy Pike's Red Ensign, the favored Safe and Sound, from the Young Brothers' string, took the lead and continued to set the pace until leaving the far turn. There he went wide and his close pursuers found room to come in fast on the rail.

Chatmoss, which had been forcing the pace of Safe and Sound most of the way, went into command but on the outside came Safe and Sound free from the tight hold which Ollie Laidley had on him up to this point. Despite a vigorous ride by Tommy Luther, Chatmoss was unable to withstand the closing bid of Don Guzman.

Mrs. Proctor's horse had only a head on Safe and Sound with Red Ensign fourth. The time was 1:53 3-5.

Don Guzman paid $15.80, $7.20 and $3.20.

One of the best races on the afternoon's card was the fifth, the Bourne Purse, 6 furlongs for 3-year-olds. The winner was Mrs. J. L. Wilson's The Darb with T. P. Morgan's Garden Message only a neck behind. The place horse had but a nose on Mrs. A. M. Creech's Our Mae, which in turn was only a nose in front of Fair Sickle.

The daily double today paid $527.20 with 36 tickets sold on the combination of Neitherone and Weeddidit in the first and third races.

Detectives Investigate Sponge in Horse's Nose

W. L. Hoag, who trains his wife's horses, discovered the sponge when he noticed a flow of blood from the nose. He obtained permission to scratch the horse from the seventh race.

Two Negro stable employes were being questioned.

BE JUST	108		7	7	7	7	7	7	Sage	21.00

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NEITHER ONE, $17.10, $7.60, $6.00; GOLDEN KEY, $3.70, $3.30; HARLEM BELLE, $5.60.

NEITHER ONE drew clear in the opening furlong, moved into a light lead after swinging from the back stretch, but started tiring when reaching the furlong pole and had to be vigorously ridden to hold GOLDEN KEY safe. The latter, in closest pursuit of the pace from practically the outset, continued in determined fashion through the stretch and was overtaking the winner rapidly at the end. HARLEM BELLE closed gamely, though never in a position to endanger the first two. COUNTER PASS was slow to begin and under punishment early, closed with a rush. A. O'CONNELL faltered.

SECOND RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:02. Off at 3:04. Winner, Mrs. J. R. Gregory's gk. bf. s. (3), by Light Brigade—Coco. Trained by J. O. Gregory. Value to winner $750; second, $150; third, $70; fourth, $30. Time, 0:24, 0:48 1-5, 1:14, 1:40 1-5, 1:47 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LIGHT BROOK, $3.70, $3.00, $2.50; GOLDEN QUEST, $6.20, $3.10; PLYMORE, $2.70.

LIGHT BROOK followed alone in nearest pursuit of the pace established by GOLDEN QUEST, wore the latter down when reaching the furlong pole, drawing out at the end. GOLDEN QUEST showed speed from the start, was rated along in front under slight restraint, but was unable to keep pace with the winner. PLAYMORE moved up steadily nearing the far turn, but was unable to keep pace. TRANSPARENT moved up on the inside, but never could reach the leaders. PLAYAWAY never a factor.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:33. Off at 3:35½. Winner, W. Imig's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WEEDIDIT, $66.80, $19.80, $7.30; ALWINTOUR, $3.70, $2.90; FLAG BEARER, $3.00.

WEEDIDIT was not hurried during the early stages, moved up gradually on the outside, closed with good energy through the stretch and was up in the closing strides to wear down ALWINTOUR. The latter, in closest pursuit of the pace, wore down FLAG BEARER for the lead in the stretch and just failed to last. FLAG BEARER showed good speed, but weakened in the stretch run. BOBBY BUXTON tired. RHODIUS started to move up no the outside leaving the back stretch, but was unable to reach the leaders.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. The Prudence Island. Purse, $1,200. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:05. Off at once. Winner, H. P. Headley's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—HOLLYROOD, $4.30, $3.50, $2.30; TINKLING BROOK, $3.50, $3.00; LITTLE NYMPH, $2.40.

HOLLYROOD moved up fast on the outside rounding from the backstretch, fought it out with TINKLING BROOK the entire closing furlong and outlasted the latter at the end. TINKLING BROOK drew clear in the first quarter mile and under vigorous ride at the finish just failed to hold the winner. LITTLE NYMPH, well placed all the way, continued gamely to the close, though no match for the first two in the closing test.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:32. Off at 4:32½. Winner, Mrs. J. L. Wilson's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—THE DARB, $18.40, $12.00, $5.50; GARDEN MESSAGE, $13.80, $5.90; OUR MAE, $2.80.

THE DARB worked his way up gradually in the last 3 furlongs, came between the leaders when reaching the stretch and closed gamely, outlasting GARDEN MESSAGE at the end. The latter moved up on the inside rounding the far turn and fought it out courageously in the stretch drive. OUR MAE displayed good speed, responded to steadying ride but was unable to keep pace in the drive. FAIRSICKLE closed gamely on the inside through the stretch. INDIANTOWN, restrained early, never able to enter into serious contention.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. The Lafayette Claiming Stakes. Purse, $2,500. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:00. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DON GUZMAN, $15.80, $7.20, $3.20; CHATMOSS, $5.50, $2.80; SAFE AND SOUND, $2.30.

DON GUZMAN, under steadying restraint while following the pace, responded gamely when called upon, closed determinedly in the stretch and was going away at the end. CHATMOSS forced the pace, wore down SAFE AND SOUND for command and despite hard riding was unable to cope with the bid of the winner. SAFE AND SOUND displayed speed in pacemaking, lost considerable ground going wide in the stretch turn and came again at the end. RED ENSIGN forwardly placed.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:30. Off at 5:30½. Winner, P. M. PARADUN, well placed from the start, carried POSTSCRIPT wide at the stretch turn and responding gamely to pressure, was along to wear down KIEVA in the closing strides. KIEVA, well placed, moved up on the inside, was in a jam at the far turn and had to take up, recovered gamely and, moving to the front, just failed. PROPAGANDIST, well up, continued well to the close. POSTSCRIPT went wide at the first turn and moved up gamely on the outside.

EIGHTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:59. Off at 6:01½. Winner, C. S. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ADAMITE, $13.80, $8.10, $6.00; GLENDYE, $19.00, $9.60; DUNROCK, $7.80.

ADAMITE showed speed from the start, was given a breathing spell after rounding the far turn, permitting GLENDYE to take command, but coming again in the stretch, was up in the closing strides. GLENDYE showed speed from the start, fought it out and just failed to last. DUNROCK moved up on the inside rounding the back stretch, saved ground into the stretch and closed willingly. BELIEVER, away well and under steadying restraint for the first half-mile, moved up gradually, but not good enough. THE POTTER was never a serious contender.

Tool Industry Expects to Set All-Time High

Orders for This Year Estimated Above 1929 Record.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 11.—Leaders of America's machine tool trade, known as an accurate forecaster of general business, estimated today the 1935 volume of this industry will approximate $150,000,000—about $20,000,000 more than in 1929, the biggest previous year in its history.

Convinced that general business is also on the threshold of a tremendous upturn, the machine tool trade is hailing its own return to prosperity with what it terms "the largest industrial exposition ever held in this country."

But behind the exposition in Cleveland, first that the machine tool men have held since 1929, exposition officials said is the fact that the decision to hold it was based upon the conviction that general recovery is at hand.

A typical expression of the regard business has for the machine tool industry as a business barometer, came today from Harper Sibley, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

"The business world is watching with lively interest the opening of the machine tool exposition," he wired. "Best wishes for a full realization of the show which holds so much promise for industry."

One of the principal reasons for the machine-tool upturn—an increase of 50 per cent from 1934—tool men say, is that general industry has deferred for six years as much as possible its normal volume of machinery replacements. At the same time, the machine tool technicians have been making advancements which render large amounts of machinery in factorie, although perhaps little used, already obsolete.

Market Moves Of the Day Seen In Brief Review

What the Stock Market Did.

	Wed.	Tues.
Advances	389	352
Declines	286	267
Unchanged	204	209
Total issues	859	827

Stocks—The bull market of 1929 was recalled as the frstest trading in more than a year carried stocks into new high ground. Numerous issues rose from 1 to 3 points, but usual leaders for the most part churned about aimlessly. Many traders saw in the feverish activity the old "professional" air of predepression days. Sales totaled 2,577,450 shares.

Bonds—Sharp breaks in the Interborough Rapid Transit Co. of New York on rumors of investigation of recent wide fluctuations served to disconcert the corporate list as a whole. Despite apparent lack of buying interest, values were well maintained. Federals were narrow, with dosses predominating at the close. Transactions up to 12,850,000.

Curb—The upward movement continued, with the majority of shares recording advances. Trading expanded to 334,000 shares.

Grains—Prices reacted from advances and wheat selling developed in the last hour, leaving the close at a cent lower to ⅜ higher. Corn was ¾ off to ⅞ up and oats were ⅛ lower to ¼ higher.

Cotton—Prices held steady until the late trading. Closings were a point higher to a point lower, with October at 10.49.

Sugar—Raw sugar was inactive, with 3.50 and 3.55 asked. Refined unchanged at 510 for the fine granulated.

Coffee—Santos No. 4 strengthened, closing at 8½ to 8¾. Rio No. 7 unchanged at 6½.

Bar silver—Unchanged in New York at 65¾ cents per ounce. In London, last prices were up ⅛d, to 29 5-16d (65.24 cents).

Bar gold—Up 2d in London and closed at 140s 9½d ($34.78).

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London—Trading on the stock exchange yesterday was quiet pending Abyssinian developments. Moat sections drooped due to lack of support. Kaffirs showed early gains, but eased later on reports of output from the Rand mines. Transatlantic and rubber shares were steady. The closing tone was easy.

Paris—The Italian-Ethiopian situation kept the bourse hesitant yesterday and a slightly heavier tone prevailed. Rentes and international shares were unsettled. The close was somewhat improved.

Berlin—The boerse was calm with prices rising slightly shortly after the opening. The market closed firm.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, Sept. 11 (AP) (U. S. Dept. Agri.).—Large quantities of fine Western-grown wools were moved at strong prices. Average to good French combing 64s and finer territory wools in original bags brought mostly 73@75 cents, scoured basis, while average to short French combing moved at 71@73 cents. Short French combing of similar grade sold at 69@71 cents, scoured basis. Average 12 months' Texas wool moved quite freely at 73@75 cents, scoured basis.

Highlights and Background Of Financial News and Trends

Bull Market in Stocks Gathers More Momentum With Rails Taking Part; Treasury Bonds Steady; Break in Tractions.

By Carlton A. Shively.

New York, Sept. 11.—Stocks were bought with greater confidence, notwithstanding the head-shaking of the past week or so among the stock market prophets, and in the heaviest trading since July 26 of last year, exceeding two and a half million shares, prices were lifted to new high levels. Gains among the leaders ranged from 1 to 2 points and strength was well maintained until the close. The comparatively small gains in view of the activity indicated a good deal of profit taking, but it was well absorbed. In contrast to the stock market's turbulence the bond trading was dull, with a narrow price range, aside from the weakness in Italian and local traction issues. Commodities were irregular. December wheat lost half a cent at 93⅛ cents a bushel.

In stocks the feature was the broadening of the rise. In contrast to the irregularity of the past several days the firmness of prices was characteristic of virtually all groups and individual issues. Most attention in the early trading was given the railroad list, chiefly because of the heavy buying of New York Central and Great Northern. Both pushed on to new high prices, stimulating such issues as Delaware & Hudson, Northern Pacific, Santa Fe and Southern Pacific.

Nickel at New High.

Coppers continued to hold trading sympathy. International Nickel was a feature with a runup to a new high price at 30 on reports that the company in August had enjoyed the best month in its recent history. Motor shares were less active, but they were under no particular pressure at any time. After an early dip Chrysler came back strongly. Two favorites of the day were Schenley and Radio. Trading in both was heavy, especially in Radio, and new high prices were set.

General Electric was another stock to forge ahead to a new high price for the past four years. Westinghouse also made a new top. Some of the public utilities moved ahead, notably Telephone and Western Union, but the local traction group was upset over the crack at market rigging given by a city official. Breaks of 1 to 4 points were taken all along the line in the stocks and bonds of I. R. T. and Manhattan.

Money markets were as unexciting as ever and the foreign exchanges were quiet. Francs were steady. More gold was engaged from Paris and a shipment or two from Amsterdam also was reported. Sterling was steady.

Industry Optimistic.

Midweek industrial reports held to the optimistic line they have followed nearly all summer. The Iron Age reported the highest operating rate for the steel industry since February and a resumption of the upward trend in steel scrap prices. Moreover, the rise in steel activity has come from many sources, exclusive of the automotive industry, which yet is expected to increase its operations.

Production of electricity last week was down from the previous week, because of the holiday, but it also was under a year ago. Railroad traffic also fell last week from the previous week, because of the holiday interruption, but loadings according to reports of leading carriers were well above the same period of last year.

Additional evidence on the prosperity of the automotive industry was furnished by the Automobile Manufacturers Association, which reported a gain of 7 per cent in August output over a year ago. The decline from July, seasonal, was 30 per cent. In the first eight months the industry shows an increase of 20 per cent over last year, and many observers look for a continuation of this trend into next year.

Hog Price Climbs To Six-Year Peak

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 11.—Hog prices in the Nation's principal livestock market today were at the highest level since August 13, 1929, with receipts half of normal and slaughter the lowest in more than 30 years.

Top hogs were bid up 10 cents to $12.25 per hunderweight, representing the farmers' direct price plus marketing charges. For packers, who include the $2.25 per hunderweight processing tax in figuring operating costs, this cost aggregated a peak of $14.50, highest in almost a decade. Producers cooperating under the AAA corn-hog program receive benefit payments from the tax fund in addition to the cash price for hogs at market. Receipts of hogs today were only 8,000.

New Check Plan May Be Tried In Local Banks

'Checkmaster' System Calls for 5-Cent Charge on Each Check.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

A new checking service materially lowering the minimum original deposit and balance required for an account, innovated in New York several months ago, may be adopted by several local banks, it was learned last night.

Called the "checkmaster plan," the new service is designed for the use of small depositors who do not find it possible to maintain substantial bank balances and who use few checks. One dollar may open an account.

Depositors are required to pay a commission of 5 cents on each item deposited and each check issued. There is no minimum balance requirement.

Local bank officials in discussing the plan declared that income from checking accounts would be materially increased under the new system; also that many people who wish to use banks, but are unable to afford the required minimum, would become customers.

Virtually uniform service charges in effect here call for a monthly charge of $1 should accounts average less than the prescribed minimum balance.

The first New York bank to try the new plan reported that within two weeks of its installation they had gained nearly 2,000 depositors from all income brackets up to $5,000.

Creamer, Schooley Promoted.

Francis J. Creamer and John H. Schooley were elected assistant branch managers of the Hamilton National Bank at the regular directors' meeting, it was announced yesterday.

Creamer will be located at the bank's Seventh street branch. He has had 17 years of banking experience, having specialized in credit, real estate and bank management. He is a graduate of the local chapter, American Institute of Banking.

Schooley, a member of the D. C. bar, will serve at Pennsylvania and Twentieth street office. A graduate of the National Law School, he has been in the banking field for the past ten years. He was formerly a note teller in the same branch.

Personals.

George O. Vass, vice president and cashier of the Riggs National Bank, has returned to his desk from a month's vacation, spent in this city. An ardent golfer, Mr. Vass took up the major part of his holiday teaching his 12-year-old son the fine points of the game.

Harry P. White, assistant treasurer of the American Security & Trust Co., manager of the northeast branch, is vacationing at Atlantic City.

Morgan, Stanley & Co. Issue Is Reported

New York, Sept. 11 (AP).—It was reported in Wall street circles today that Morgan, Stanley & Co., the newly formed organization which will be the successor to the investment business formerly conducted by J. P. Morgan & Co., will head the underwriting group for a forthcoming issue of $18,172,000 Consumers Power Co. bonds.

The firm is composed of several former partners of the Morgan firm, including Henry Sturgis Morgan, son of J. P. Morgan.

Canada's Wheat Up 14,692,000 Bushels

Ottawa, Sept. 11 (AP).—Canada's wheat production for this year is estimated at 290,541,000 bushels, comprising 277,274,000 bushels of spring wheat and 13,267,000 of fall wheat, according to the Dominion bureau of statistics. The crop for the prairie provinces was estimated at 272,000,000.

The total wheat crop for all Canada last year was 275,849,000 bushels, 14,692,000 less than this year's crop.

Chrysler on New York Central Committee

New York, Sept. 11 (AP).—Patrick E. Crowley, former president of the New York Central Railroad, resigned today as a member of the executive committee. His place on the committee was filled by Walter P. Chrysler, automobile manufacturer. Mr. Crowley, who retired as president January 1, 1931, remains a member of the New York Central board of directors.

Anaconda Plans Novel Feature In New Issue

Proposed Debentures to Be Retired on Basis of Earnings.

New York, Sept. 11.—A novel sinking fund arrangement has been provided in the $55,000,000 issue of Anaconda Copper Co. 15-year debentures, which under present plans is to be registered with the securities and exchange commission probably the latter part of next week, as something of an offset to the omission of a convertible or stock purchase feature, according to the Wall Street Journal.

Instead of the usual sinking fund retirement provisions customarily included in industrial bond issues, the Anaconda debentures will have one which will operate in relation to earning power. The amounts of bonds periodically to be retired, it is understood, will range from a fixed minimum amount to a sizable maximum total, in accordance with changes in earnings of the company, such retirements to be effected at a varying scale of prices, covering a substantial premium.

If the registration statement is completed within the time now estimated and forwarded to Washington, the issue should be ready for public offering around October 10 or 11, barring postponement due to market conditions, etc., unforeseen now. While a 4¼ per cent coupon rate was considered, it is understood that a 4½ per cent level has been decided upon. There will be more than a dozen houses in the underwriting group with Blyth & Co., Inc., as managers of the syndicate.

Motor Car Output Up 20 Per Cent in Year

New York, Sept. 11 (AP).—Motor vehicle production by members of the Automobile Manufacturers Association for the first eight months of this year was 20 per cent above that for the corresponding period last year, the preliminary estimate issued today by the association disclosed.

The output of association members for the first eight months of this year was placed at 1,969,816 units. This compares with 1,641,949 vehicles produced in the January-August period of 1934. (The association figures do not include the Ford Motor Co.)

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

Foreign exchange movements against the dollar were narrow yesterday.

In New York the pound sterling declined ¼ of a cent at $4.93¾, while earlier in London the dollar gained slightly at 4.93 13-16 to the pound.

The French franc held unchanged from Tuesday's close in the American market at 6.59¼. In prior dealings in Paris the dollar was a shade improved at the equivalent of 6.589 cents to the franc.

Guilders rose .01 of a cent in New York at 67.58 cents, and Swiss francs were up a similar amount at 32.54 cents. The lire advanced .00¼ of a cent at 8.15¼ cents.

Steel Output, Forging Ahead, Now 52½ %

Rise of 2 Points in Week Reflects Widespread Trade Upturn.

New York, Sept. 11.—Steel ingot production has risen 2 points to 52½ per cent, the highest rate since the second week in February. Gains have been widespread, with operations rising 1 point to 45 per cent at Pittsburgh, 3 points to 80 per cent at Chicago, 3 points to 80 per cent in the Wheeling district, 6 points to 38 per cent at Buffalo, 9 points to 64 per cent in the Cleveland-Lorain area, 10 points to 70 per cent in the Ohio River district, and 1 point to 39 per cent in the Philadelphia zone. Elsewhere output is substantially unchanged, with Detroit holding at the high rate of 95 per cent and the Valleys at 60 per cent.

Scrap, after a period of hesitancy, has resumed its upward trend, an advance in heavy melting steel at Philadelphia lifting the Iron Age composite from $12.58 to $12.75 a ton, its highest level since the second week of March, 1934.

The gain in steel production has occurred without much added support from the automotive industry. Though parts makers are ordering steel somewhat more freely, expected round-lot orders from automobile manufacturers for new model production have not materialized. However, producers of flat-rolled steel look for generous releases from the motorcar trade within the next two or three weeks. The volume of this business, when it appears, will largely determine the extent of any further rise in steel works operations.

Railroad Buying Lags.

Miscellaneous demand for steel, which has been surprisingly large in the aggregate, is showing signs of leveling off. Tin plate production is entering a period of seasonal recession. Railroad buying remains at depression levels. Construction, though still far below the average volume of the 20's, is improving.

Structural steel awards for the week, at 25,650 tons, are the largest since the third week in April. Bookings of sheet steel piling total 7,500 tons. Navy awards of 23 vessels to private and Government yards will mean the placing of 40,000 tons of plates, shapes and bars.

Wheat Prices Yield to Selling

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 11.—Reacting from advances, wheat values in Chicago averaged lower late today. Selling pressure that developed toward the last in the wheat pit here came largely from houses with Canadian connections, and was believed to be hedging and profit-taking. After trading had ended, estimates were current that new export business in Canadian wheat today aggregated 2,000,000 bushels.

The Chicago wheat market closed irregular, 1 cent lower to ⅜ higher, compared with yesterday's finish, December 93-93⅛, corn ¾ off to ⅞ up, December 57, oats at ⅛ decline to ¼ advance, and provisions varying from 15 cents setback to a rise of 7 cents.

Wedding Celebration Sends Merchant to Jail

Smyrna (AP).—Although of limited means a young Turkish merchant named Remzi decided to celebrate his wedding by feasting a hundred of his friends.

Twenty roasted lambs, 100 fowls, 450 pounds of pilaff (stewed rice), and other delicacies figured in the menu.

All went well until Remzi and his guests organized a bridal procession through the streets preceded by 25 musicians. The party was halted by the police who arrested the bridegroom. The wedding did take place a week later. But first Remzi spent eight days in jail, first victim of a new law against squandering. The authorities also fined him heavily and he still has to meet the tradesmen's bills.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.
Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Morgan Baker.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Sept. 10.—The convention of the American Federation of Government Employes today adopted a resolution calling for the boycott of newspapers carrying stories or editorials unfavorable to Government employes or organized labor.

BAKER.

In another resolution the Federation expressed its regret at the death of Senator Huey P. Long, with President E. Claude Babcock remarking that he never knew of a vote by the Louisianan that was detrimental to the American people.

Defeat of a third resolution dimmed the possible amalgamation of the A. F. G. E. and the National Federation of Federal Employes. The proposal would have urged local lodges to take unified action with the N. F. F. E. when occasion is presented and to pursue policies which might pave the way to amalgamation.

Membership of James G. Yaden in both the A. F. G. E. and the N. F. F. E. was challenged by John Donovan, NRA lodge. Mr. Yaden, delegate from the Civil Service Lodge, was upheld in his dual membership on the grounds that as a high Government official he must maintain an impartial position toward employe organizations. He is chief of the examining division of the Civil Service Commission.

Babcock Opposed.

More opposition to the reelection of Babcock developed. There were threats of an open split in the organization with accompanying withdrawal of whole lodges.

The feud between Babcock and National Secretary Esther Penn took a formal aspect when the secretary issued an open letter charging that President Babcock has "exploited" himself and stepped beyond the "bounds of prudence and good judgment in castigating those in the Senate and House who differ with you."

Miss Penn then attacked the activities of Charles L. Stengle, who is campaigning for Babcock and who is reported to have proxy votes of five or more lodges. These votes will be contested.

Political chicanery, dictatorship and personal aggrandizement were laid to Babcock.

An 1,800-word statement also was issued by Miss Penn, outlining her charges of having been deprived during the past year of authority of national secretary.

Ira D. Scott, Veterans' Administration, president District department, declared that Miss Penn was justified in making her statements and in using documents in her possession to prove the falsity of allegations against her.

Fascist Trend Deplored.

Scott deplored what he termed the "fascist" trend of the convention. He said, "They (Babcock, Custer and Stengle) claim to conduct the convention on principles of Americanism, their conception of which is the elimination of any opposing ideas by requiring absolute conformity to predetermined patterns of behavior or coerced membership of factions representing themselves to be highly American. But, nevertheless, they are utilizing principles more like fascism."

Further dissension developed in the banning of alternates from voting or speaking at any time from the floor, even in the absence of their delegates. The ban was clamped on such leaders as Henry Rhine, NRA; George Simmons, Bureau of Engraving and Printing; Mrs. Maude Anderson, Internal Revenue, president Government Employes Sick Benefit Association; Arthur Stein, NRA, and others.

Little progress was made on resolutions and legislative programs.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, changed his plans and notified the convention he will speak tomorrow.

Factional hatchets were buried temporarily tonight at the annual banquet tendered the delegates by the A. F. G. E. members of Cincinnati.

Dancing and music will be features of a party sponsored by Local No. 262, N. F. F. E., Thursday at 8 p. m. at the home of Mrs. Leila W. Marshall (C), 3703 Bangor street southeast.

ONE of the strongest dynasties that ever ruled a land was the dynasty of the slaves that held the throne of Ghazni in northern India for 210 years, from 976 to 1186. Eighteen kings ruled during that time, and each of them came to the throne as a slave to succeed his master.

It started in 976 with the death of King Alp-Tigrin at the age of 96. This king, who founded the Mohammedan dynasty of the Ghaznivides, was succeeded by Sabuk-Tigin, his slave. This slave, not a mere menial of the king, was an intimate of the ruler—in fact a member of the royal family, having married a princess.

After his death his slave succeeded him, and so it went through 18 reigns. Each time the king was followed by his former slave. It has been suggested that the choice of slaves to rule was wise—that former slaves came to the throne with experience and tolerance.

Strange as it seems, asbestos seems to be one building material that improves with use. If it is used as flooring it actually becomes tougher and more wear resistant the older it gets. Asbestos is a rock in fiber form, and when used as flooring its fibers become packed together better as time and wear go on. It is virtually impossible to wear it out.
